A Message from Dean Leslie on Violence at the Capitol

Yesterday we witnessed an assault on our democracy. Congress was confronted by a violent mob intent on intimidating legislators to override the will of the people. It is critical that we condemn these lawless and hateful actions.

Professor Ekow Yankah Joins NPR's Reset To Discuss Police Reaction to Insurrection at Capitol

"You can't help but to be struck by the spectacular difference in how people who aim violence at the Capitol are treated as opposed to black protestors who are marching for their own civil rights," says Yankah.

Professor Deborah Pearlstein Comments on Pressure for Justice Breyer to Retire in Bloomberg Law

Pearlstein, who clerked for the late Justice Stevens, says that “retiring or taking senior status is one of the least radical steps federal judges can take who are worried about the composition of the judiciary and the trajectory of the judiciary.”

Professor Alex Reinert Speaks to Politico on Aftermath of Trump Lawsuits Challenging Election Results

“I have misgivings about the extent to which it has become harder to access the courts and I think some of these election decisions rested on doctrine that has been used to restrict access to the courts,” says Reinert.
