Professor Matthew Wansley Speaks to The New York Times on Regulations For Self-Driving Cars

“The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration could do this, but would the courts uphold it?” said Wansley on potential rules that would explicitly control the use of autonomous technology systems in cars.

Professor Pamela Foohey Speaks to Law360 on the Costs of Executing a Texas Two-Step Bankruptcy Strategy

“I still think now for companies thinking about doing something like this to deal with mass torts through bankruptcy, the legal fees might be essentially pocket change,” Foohey said.

Professor Edward Zelinsky Discusses the Costs and Benefits of Connecticut's Retirement Program With the Connecticut Inside Investigator

"I'm really a believer in these programs, I think they made sense from a variety of perspectives," Zelinsky said. "Today we're in a very polarized atmosphere but this is something that should appeal to a broad spectrum of opinion."
