Professor Jessica Roth Talks on MSNBC about Impeachment Trial

Professor Jessica Roth spoke with Brian Williams on MSNBC about the Democratic team's lawyers at the impeachment, saying, "I think they did an extraordinarily effective job. I thought they told a compelling narrative...they explained why it all mattered...They were speaking to members of the Senate, the public and speaking to history."

Professor Kate Shaw Writes Op-Ed in The New York Times: Speaks to NPR About Impeachment

Professor Kate Shaw wrote in The New York Times that the Senate impeachment trial is a "hybrid affair, part law and part politics...There's certainly an argument that here the veneer of law serves mostly to obscure what is really an exercise in raw political power."

Professor Deborah Pearlstein Analyzes Impeachment Proceedings

Professor Deborah Pearlstein spoke to ABC News, saying, "The President has done something unusual which is to say senior White House officials are immune from having to comply with any Congressional subpoenas at all."

Professor Sam Weinstein Comments in The Wall Street Journal About T-Mobile/Sprint Merger

Professor Sam Weinstein spoke to The Wall Street Journal, regarding the California Public Utility Commission's delay in the approval of the Sprint/T-mobile merger, saying, "It has some leverage, but it's not endless. What tends to come out of these proceedings is some concessions by the merging parties."

Professor Myriam Gilles Talks to Consumer Reports about Arbitration

Professor Myriam Gilles commented to Consumer Reports on the issue of arbitration clauses that aren't made clear to consumers, saying, "Placing the clauses there [deep within a long document] is intended to obscure the immensity of the rights being forfeited."

Professor Alex Reinert Talks to HuffPost About Impeachment Process

Professor Alex Reinert commented in HuffPost on the administration's lawyers changing positions during the impeachment process: "It is one thing for parties to change their position over time on a legal question — but in this case the president appears to be taking a disingenuous position in at least one of the proceedings."

Associate Dean Val Myteberi Comments on Intellectual Property Law in LLM Guide

Val Myteberi, Associate Dean of Graduate and International Programs, was quoted in an article in LLM Guide, focusing on a surge of interest in Intellectual Property law. "Factors including a boom in the creative industries, the globalization and digitalization of trade, as well as a global push to protect IP rights, have created the ideal conditions for secure and lucrative [IP law] jobs," she says.

Cardozo's Innocence Project Clinic celebrated a victory as a judge overturned the rape charges of Rafael Ruiz, a Bronx man who had been imprisoned for 25 years. The Innocence Project team, which included Cardozo clinic students Sasha Rubman and Matt Christiana, pushed for the testing of the victim's sexual assault kit, which contributed to Ruiz's exoneration.
