Bet Tzedek Clinic Fights on Behalf of Deaf Student, Files Amicus Brief with SCOTUS

On January 18, the Bet Tzedek Civil Litigation Clinic filed a U.S. Supreme Court amicus brief in support of certiorari in the case of a deaf student who suffered 12 years of isolation and distress because his school refused to provide him with a qualified sign language interpreter.

Professor Pamela Foohey Quoted in Law360 on Bankruptcy Issues

"The day of reckoning on third-party releases is here, and part of the reason why it's here is that bankruptcy attorneys have strategically, in the best interest of their clients, pushed bankruptcy judges to approve broad releases," Foohey says.

Professor Kate Shaw Comments on Justice Breyer's Retirement in The New York Times

"There's a good chance," Shaw says, "that the dynamics on the current court — both the speed and magnitude of the change that's coming — had some impact on Breyer's decision to go now." She also discussed Breyer on the Start Here podcast.
