Cardozo Celebrates Black History Month

Cardozo is committed to training lawyers who can recognize and respond to the ways in which systemic racism impacts our world. Throughout the month we will highlight on social media how Cardozo is working to advance anti-racism and equity in our school. We will also highlight members of our alumni community.

Professor Ekow Yankah Is a Guest on WBEZ's Reset to Discuss Jason Van Dyke's Release from Prison

"The reality that everybody recognizes is that most people who commit second-degree murder get vastly larger sentences than police officers-the average homicide gets almost 50 years in jail, whereas an average police killing gets around 16 years, but even compared to the average police killing [Van Dyke] got quite a lenient sentence," Yankah says.

Professor Matthew Wansley Comments in TechCrunch on Autonomous Vehicle Safety

"If we fix this loophole, we should have a good idea of how often AVs are causing or failing to prevent crashes," says Wansley.
