Professor Kate Shaw's Podcast, Strict Scrutiny, Wins Best Politics or Opinion Podcast Award from The Podcast Academy

The weekly podcast, hosted by three constitutional law professors— Leah Litman, Melissa Murray and Shaw, provides “in-depth, accessible, and irreverent analysis of the Supreme Court.” Since 2019 the trio has illuminated and amused listeners with the latest on headlines and legal questions that impact daily life in the United States.

Professor Jessica Roth Speaks to Bloomberg Radio and the Associated Press About Alex Murdaugh Verdict

“It came down to just a couple of key pieces of evidence,” Roth told the Associated Press. “And those were: the cellphone video ... that placed the defendant at the scene of the crime ... the defendant’s denial to law enforcement agents that he had been at the kennels with his wife and son that night, and then finally, his testimony on the stand.”

Professor Pamela Foohey Speaks to Bloomberg Law on Bankruptcy Claims Agents Who Are Under Fire for Mishandling Private Information of Sex Abuse Survivors

“Every dollar you spend on something like Epiq, which I think is necessary in a diocese case, is money that you’re taking away from the survivors,” Foohey said.

Cardozo Civil Rights Clinic's Lawsuit Against Department of Justice and the Bureau of Prisons Discussed in The Nation

The article discusses the legal assistance that the clinic provided the author in obtaining footage of force-feedings at a federal prison, and how the procedure may amount to torture.
