Gloria Steinem Accepts International Advocate for Peace Award at Cardozo

“Remember that revolution is like a tree, it doesn't grow from the top, it grows from the bottom,” Ms. Steinem said.

Professor Jessica Roth Appears on PBS NewsHour to Discuss Trump Indictment

“I think that it's going to be probably a prelude for other indictments to come,” Roth said. “This, in a sense, may have been the first step in a number of crimes that the former President may have committed in the nature of obstructing justice and impairing our democracy.” She also discussed the case on CNN.

Professor Saurabh Vishnubhakat Quoted in Wall Street Journal on New FTC Order That Pressures Tech Platforms To End Fraudulent Ads

“The very act of asking the question can be perceived as the government leaning on you,” said Vishnubhakat.

Professor Pamela Foohey Speaks to CNN About How Safe Money Is Outside of Banks

Generally speaking, “your protection lies solely in the contract with the exchange,” Foohey said. “And [those contracts] can be updated without notice.”

Professor Young Ran (Christine) Kim Speaks to Law360 on UN's Steps To Examine International Tax Issues

Kim said the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's Pillar One is too burdensome for developing countries that have sparse tax administration resources to begin with and that both developing countries and those with advanced economies will have to determine whether the revenue estimates from the OECD's Pillar One are worth the administrative burden.

Visiting Professor Mauricio Noroña's Talk at YU About the Emotional Route to Asylum Covered by Noticias NY1

“All these different reasons blend into one and understanding that ... the people behind the story, behind the news seems to me to be extremely important so that we can make policies respond precisely to that type of dimension that exists beyond what we frequently hear in politics,” Noroña said.

Visiting Professor Gaia Bernstein Writes Op-Ed for TIME Magazine About ChatGPT

“ChatGPT has highlighted the risks of mindlessly sending off our children into a tech-dominated future,” Bernstein wrote. “It has underscored that making different choices is possible and important. Particularly for a generation of children that has already spent over a decade, and an entire pandemic, in front of screens.” She also wrote an op-ed for WIRED on her new book, “Unwired.”
