Professor Kathryn Miller Comments to New York Law Journal on Gov. Hochul's 'Public Safety Plan'

"There are some provisions that seem like they might promote safety, but when you actually look at how they're applied, they certainly won't," says Miller.

Dean Melanie Leslie Appoints Luís Calderón Gómez to the Faculty as an Assistant Professor

"I am so pleased that Luís Calderón Gómez will join our faculty. His expertise in tax and corporate law will be a strong addition to our program," says Dean Leslie.

Professor Ekow Yankah, on NBCLX, Discusses Impacts of Ketanji Brown Jackson's Role with the U.S. Sentencing Commission

“It can't just be from the point of view of ‘I locked people up,’” says Yankah. “It has to also be from the point of view [of] ‘I've seen the people who needed to get out.’” He also appeared live on NBC LX.

Professor Kate Shaw Talks with ABC News About Judge Ketanji Brown Jackson's Confirmation Hearing

“The three liberal justices on the court will be three women, two of them women of color,” says Shaw. “Even if what they are doing is just issuing righteous dissents in cases, I think that will have a certain symbolic and substantive quality because it is emanating from these three female justices that will mark a real change on the court.”
