The Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law of Yeshiva University
Class of 1998

Dear Graduates:

On behalf of the administration and faculty of Yeshiva University, I am pleased to extend to you or most heartfelt good wishes upon your graduation from Yeshiva University's Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law. Thanks to the outstanding efforts of your professors, you have been prepared for career service not only to the law, but to the advancement of the greater good of society. As graduates of ours, you are now part a Yeshiva University alumni community which through the law, medicine, social work, psychology, the rabbinate and so many other professional fields and business, are all striving to create a better world.

As attorneys, you are now charged specifically to live up to Justice Cardozo's enduring adage that "the final cause of the law is the welfare of society." I am confident that your training at Cardozo School of Law has prepared and sensitized you to keep that timeless teaching constantly in mind even as you fashion personally satisfying careers in the law.

With all best wishes for successful and satisfying careers,

Cordially yours,

NORMAN LAMM
President

To 1998 Graduates

Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law

It has been a pleasure to be your dean for the last two years. Many good things have happened to the law school during your stay here and you have had a significant part in shaping its future.

As the Class of 1998, you represent the 19th graduating class, a milestone that reflects your own achievements as well as those of this institution.

On behalf of myself, the faculty, administration and staff, let me say how proud we all are of your achievements and how much we anticipate your continued successes as alumni.

Cardozo is a better place for your having been here. We congratulate you and wish you well.

Sincerely,

Paul R. Verkuil

GRADUATION
Before I start my address, I have to make one bit of clarification for some of my family members who might be a little confused right now. No grandma, I’m not the valedictorian.

Family, friends, distinguished faculty, and fellow graduates - Of all the people out there, there’s one person I’d like to meet. By far this person wields more power than any person in this room. People are constantly charged with the responsibility of living up to this person’s expectations. In fact, soon, clients will be paying us to figure this person out. Cases will hinge on whether someone acted as he would act or simply ignored his judgment. Oddly, this mystery man isn’t any more intelligent than any of us. While we have learned to write, think, and speak like lawyers, he just plods through his daily routine -- perhaps never even giving the legal system a second thought.

His name, of course, is Reasonable Man and we’ve also come across his politically correct twin, Reasonably Prudent Person.

So why do we all defer to his judgment? You see, WE persuade, that’s our job. HE reacts, that’s his. Most of us first heard about him in Torts. And since then, we’ve seen him make cameo appearances in most of our classes. It seems that each industry packages him according to its own norms and standards. Inevitably, we always wind up asking the same question: "Given these set of circumstances, did the defendant act like a reasonably prudent person?"

Yes, it’s hard to believe that it was three years ago when we read Justice Cardozo’s opinion, for example, that a reasonably prudent landowner would anticipate certain dangerous conditions. Reasonably Prudent Landowner would take reasonable measures to protect trespassing young lads of 16. And now, three years, three deans, and countless caffeinated beverages later, here we are. In cap and gown.

I have to ask: Given our set of circumstances, would reasonably prudent Cardozo students have done anything differently? Probably. But we’re not on trial here; we’re at Graduation. Instead, I’d like to draw upon our collective circumstance and put forth a mode of conduct for reasonable Cardozo alums.

Every reaction has a time and a place- sadness, elation, silence, and conversation, all have their time under the sun. According to Maimonides, a Rabbinic philosopher of the 12th Century, however, there is one exception. Arrogance has no place. For some reason, the noble profession we’ve chosen has been accused of rampant egoism. As we leave formal schooling behind, there is something that should keep us in check. No matter how well we may present our stellar arguments, no matter how persuasive our reasoning, if it doesn’t pass muster by our ordinary friend, Reasonable Man, it just doesn’t matter. Humbling, isn’t it.

But how else can we keep things in perspective as we ride the fine line being proud of our accomplishments and becoming another lawyer joke? Think back. Before law school, we were de facto reasonable. Reasonable as opposed to rash, calm as opposed to convoluted. We’re still the same sensible people we were three years ago (most of us anyway). In any case, now, for better or worse, discerning the reasonable course of action defines what we do. People will come to us with questions and we must exude confidence as we answer them. Legal proficiency is not enough. Sure, we can’t forget to Shepardize or look at the latest statute. But we’re counselors now. Whatever field we’re in, from public interest to public offerings, people will be relying on our judgment.

To some extent, we all have to admit that the prospect is both daunting and exhilarating. Three years ago, if you recall, we had a similar outlook regarding a task which is now behind us. But with encouragement from those who stood with us during these three years - friends, family, and each other. I’m sure we’ll continue to rise to any occasion. To our relatives and friends who were there for us, I say "thank you."

To the professors who guided us through classes, clinics, competitions, and journals, an anonymous quote comes to mind. "Give a person a fish and they can eat for a day, teach a person how to fish and they eat for life" -- Professors, thank you for a most enlightening fishing expedition.

It’s a good thing professors here have encouraged us to "think like lawyers" and "write like lawyers." Strangely, once we finally thought we had it down pat, in ITAP for instance, we got critiqued for finally "talking like lawyers." Apparently, the reasonable Cardozo student is expected to know the practical difference between legalese and "lawyerlike noises." While one unnecessarily complicates, the other couches after years of training into clear and concise.

That’s our mission - the Reasonable Cardozo Grad standard, if you will - become proficient enough to explain things to clients in ways they understand while simultaneously integrating client needs and expectations. Use our analytical skills which we have developed here at Cardozo to look at things from all angles and determine what the most rational, prudent strategy would be to solve the matters at hand.

SO, when & if we finally meet Reasonable Man - so long as we live up to our standard, we can be confident that we’ve lived up to his.

To my friends, colleagues -- Good luck on the bar.
Keep it real & keep in touch. Thank you.

As of April 1998, the year book was not even a thought — then as our time at Cardozo grew to an end I realized that we needed a year book as a memory of the past three years at Cardozo Law School. Some people laughed and said they would rather forget the three long years they spent here, but in reality our days at law school will follow us for the rest of our lives. I had never worked on a year book before, nor had I ever wanted to, but for some reason this became my project. Julie, Elisha and I put this together sitting upstairs on the 11th floor in the criminal law clinic. We started making calls and put up signs for pictures. And people came to have their pictures taken. (Okay the threat of using the first year face book pictures did come into play!) We had meetings at the SBA and we put together a proposal. Last years year book cost so much money and very few people even purchased them - so we kept down the cost to sell as many as possible. We hit our goal in June and then put the whole project on hold to study for the bar. The entire year book was in a box on my floor for most of the summer and there it sat. People kept asking about the year book and the deadline was pushed back further and further. Elisha and I sat in my apartment and put the layout together (Elisha did most of the work because I had no clue what to do.) The publisher kept calling wondering where the year book was, students kept calling wondering why they had not received a copy. Well the year book is done and I want to thank everyone who helped put it together. In all honestly Elisha, Julie and I did most of the work! I learned one very important lesson — NEVER VOLUNTEER FOR ANYTHING. I am happy that we have a way to remember our three years at Cardozo and the people we spent it with. Law school was a time for all of us to grow - to change and become lawyers. As I sit here today reflecting on Cardozo and why the year book was important to me, I think back to stressful and fun times I had at school. I hope everyone enjoys the year book and if you have any complaints or comments — well keep them to yourself because we worked really hard to make it happen! Good luck to everyone in their future careers.
