Faculty in the News

- Professor Chris Buccafusco spoke to Yahoo Finance about a potential infringement case between Nike and the USPS, distinguishing the matter from the recent bout between Nike and MSCHF, stating that "Nike's claims to doing this without a license are much weaker than MSCHF."

- Professor Kate Levine expresses concern surrounding the Chauvin trial to France 24: "My concern is that Derek Chauvin gets convicted, and the police department that he works for says: 'this guy was a bad apple, otherwise, we have no problems.'"
- Professor Alex Reinert discussed qualified immunity with Bloomberg Law, stating "You can slice the onion pretty thinly on how courts will apply precedent."
- Professor Ekow Yankah commented on the Chauvin defense strategy in The Washington Post, noting "We would be lying to ourselves if we didn't point out that there's a long history of making Black victims of police violence dangerous ... in a way that requires incredibly violent submission because of the shadow of drugs."

Faculty Scholarship
