Professor Kate Levine Speaks on Difficulty in Obtaining Justice in Police Violence Cases

"Prosecutors will do a lot of investigation and take a lot of care before they even decide to charge a police officer. It could take a year," Levine tells USA Today. "Natural favoritism and the bias in favor of police is always going to be the biggest obstacle," Levine says to Insider. She further noted, "it's one trial, in one city, of a really bad guy, and my feeling is no matter what happens in this trial, very little will change in policing."
