Francesca Acocella and Stephen Iannacone Present at National Association of Law Student Affairs Professionals Conference

Acocella, Director of Student Life, and Iannacone, Director of Academic Success, gave a talk on “The Intersections and Collaborations Between Student Services and Academic Success” on June 14. They discussed the benefits and limitations of collaboration between Student Services and Academic Success offices and how to overcome those limitations.

Professor Deborah Pearlstein Speaks to MSNBC About Why the Justice Department Is Holding the Trump Trial in Florida

“It is a conundrum that the Justice Department is facing,” Pearlstein said. “They've got to thread a remarkably narrow needle here in what they're trying to accomplish with this prosecution. They want to, obviously, see justice done... but they're up against a clock. This needs to be wrapped up, or close, before the 2024 election.”

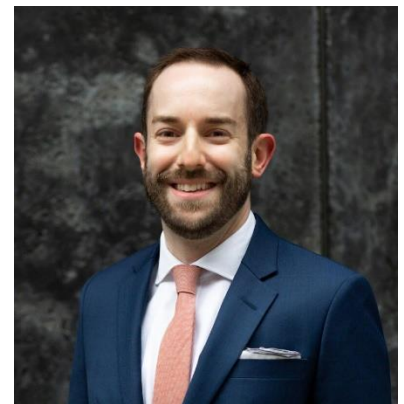

Professor Jessica Roth Appears on CNN's AC360 to Discuss Trump Documents Case

“One of the concerns about Judge [Aileen] Cannon is will she delay the proceedings in a way that favors former President Trump and what he might be seeking here in terms of getting this prolonged into the political season,” Roth said. “So I thought the fact that she seemed to seize the bull by the horns and issue an order that was actually a relatively tight scheduling order was a good sign.”

Professor Jacob Noti-Victor Speaks to Bloomberg Law on Jack Daniel's Trademark Case

“The concurrences, more than in many cases, shed some interesting light on both how the Court got where they got, and also where courts might take this,” Noti-Victor said. “It’s an invitation to take the law in new directions.”
