Cath Collins has been Professor of Transitional Justice at Ulster University's Transitional Justice Institute since March 2013. She was previously an Associate Professor of Politics at the Universidad Diego Portales, Chile, where she founded and still directs the Transitional Justice Observatory (www.derechoshumanos.udp.cl, Observatorio JT). Observatorio JT maps current justice, as well as truth and memory developments in Chile over the Pinochet-era dictatorship. Observatorio JT also works closely with relatives' associations and with forensic, judicial and legal professionals, and is a founding member of the Latin American Transitional Justice Network (www.flajt.com). Professor Collins has also produced manuals, workshop materials and training inputs for relatives' associations, lawyers, judicial personnel, the forensic service and detective police in Latin America. She has also served as an expert witness before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. She is currently involved in research and exchange between the UK and Latin America about the search for victims of disappearances. Professor Collins teaches and supervises in the UK and Chile on Latin American politics, international criminal justice, human rights, and transitional justice.
