Perlmutter Center Deputy Director Derrick Hamilton Pens Op-Ed in NY Daily News

“If signed, many wrongfully convicted New Yorkers who were left little choice but to plead guilty, might finally have their day in court, and those whose innocence hearings were tragically halted in 2018, when the NYS Court of Appeals ruled to prevent those who pleaded guilty from challenging their convictions, might now be able to present evidence of their innocence,” Hamilton wrote.

Professor Pamela Foohey Speaks to The Economist About Perdue's Bankruptcy Plan Being Reviewed by SCOTUS

Fohey said that Purdue “really pushed the envelope” in how it used bankruptcy. If the justices agree and limit the use of third-party releases, corporations may find that bankrupting smaller subsidiaries to fight sprawling lawsuits is no longer the saving grace it once was.
