Professor Deborah Pearlstein Talks Impeachment on NYC, MSNBC, and BBC Radio

Professor Deborah Pearlstein commented on the Impeachment podcast with WNYC's Brian Lehrer, "an impeachable offense doesn't have to be a crime as currently embodied in the federal criminal code; the existing criminal laws didn't exist when the framers wrote the Constitution. Crimes as such weren't what the framers had in mind when they put impeachment into the Constitution; what they were thinking about were serious offenses against the public trust."

Professor Jessica Roth Comments on Impeachment on MSNBC, CNN, and Bloomberg's Balance of Power

Professor Jessica Roth spoke to CNN, MSNBC, and Bloomberg's Balance of Power about the Articles of Impeachment. "The most important audience for Senator Schumer's letter is those moderate Republicans," she told Katy Tur on MSNBC. "While it may be that they ultimately vote to acquit the President, they're interested in the perceived legitimacy of the process."

Professor Kate Shaw Comments on Impeachment on ABC News

Professor Kate Shaw spoke on ABC News on the day of the impeachment vote: "By saying he thinks [his conduct] was fine, there's a message being sent that he would willingly engage in this kind of conduct again."

Professor Shaw was also featured in National Jurist's "Superstars" roundup in its fall issue.

Professor Edward Zelinsky Comments in Forbes on Mormon Church Tax Issue

Professor Edward Zelinsky spoke to Forbes regarding the tax news that Ensign Peak Advisors, Inc., exempt as an integrated auxiliary of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS), has accumulated over $100 billion in assets without ever making any charitable distributions. He said, "It strikes me as a question of policy rather than law."
