Professor Jessica Roth Comments to CNN About Losing Jurors in the Elizabeth Holmes Trial

"Now, having there been this much of a trial, it's even harder," says Roth, of the idea of trying to find another pool of untainted jurors should there be a new trial. "You also have the difficulty of bringing back all of your witnesses again." She also commented on Betsy DeVos' claim she was conned by Holmes in USA Today.

Professor Pamela Foohey Discusses Spectrum's Renewing Service Offers with the Los Angeles Times

"Saying to former customers that you will forgo past debt if the customer resumes service could be an empty promise," says Foohey. "Customers will want to make sure that their account balance is set to zero when they resume service." She also spoke to Consumer Reports about subprime car loans, and her Minnesota Law Review paper was cited in The Washington Post.

Cardozo/Google Patent Diversity Project Obtains First Patent on Behalf of Black Female Inventor

Cardozo's Patent Diversity Project, led by Director Victor Wang '15, has secured its first patent on behalf of Rose Coppee, a black inventor, for a modular hairbrush. Funded in part by Google, the Patent Diversity Project aims to close the "patent gap" by providing free legal assistance to inventors who have been historically underrepresented, including women and people of color.
