Professor Pamela Foohey Discusses "The No Bonuses in Bankruptcy Act" in Bloomberg Law

"The bill dovetails with a rising sense that some workers are treated significantly better than others. Executives are paid well, will continue to be paid well and shouldn't need millions to stay with the company," Foohey says.

Professor Myriam Gilles Is a Guest on Center for Litigation and Courts' Podcast About Mass Torts

"I think we're so afraid of binding adjudication in these cases, we've literally settled for second-best justice over the past few decades," says Gilles. "My idea is to put greater reliance on Rule 23(c)'s issue-class, forcing the parties to present their best case to the jury, and let the jury apply the facts to the law."
