

Yeshiva University, Cardozo School of Law

LARC @ Cardozo Law

AEJ Blog

Journal Blogs

4-4-2014

Panel: Disclosure and Notice Practices in Private Data Collection

Cardozo Arts & Entertainment Law Journal

Follow this and additional works at: <https://larc.cardozo.yu.edu/aelj-blog>

Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation

Cardozo Arts & Entertainment Law Journal, "Panel: Disclosure and Notice Practices in Private Data Collection" (2014). AEJ Blog. 44.

<https://larc.cardozo.yu.edu/aelj-blog/44>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Journal Blogs at LARC @ Cardozo Law. It has been accepted for inclusion in AELJ Blog by an authorized administrator of LARC @ Cardozo Law. For more information, please contact christine.george@yu.edu, ingrid.mattson@yu.edu.

Panel: Disclosure and Notice Practices in Private Data Collection

Posted on April 4, 2014

When you click “I agree” on a website’s privacy policy, are you really consenting to all the terms? Is that thick block of small-font text that makes up most companies’ privacy policies sufficient to give you notice of just what you’re consenting to? And is it even possible to inform users of all the potential uses of their data without going into too much detail?

Esteemed panelists Lorrie Cranor, Ryan P. Harkins, and Helen Nissenbaum addressed these questions and more as part of the Cardozo Arts & Entertainment Law Journal’s Spring Symposium, Data Privacy & Transparency in Private and Government Data, on April 4, 2014 at Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law.

Follow the links below for more on what each panelist had to say about data collection and privacy:

Lorrie Cranor – Better Notice is Needed

Ryan Harkins – Big Data Means a Change in How We Consider Notice and Consent

Helen Nissenbaum – “Notice and Consent is a Sham”