Where Corporations Are: Why Casual Visits to New York Are Bad for Business

Jeanne L. Schroeder
Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law, schroedr@yu.edu

David Gray Carlson
Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law, dcarlson@yu.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://larc.cardozo.yu.edu/faculty-articles
Part of the Law Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://larc.cardozo.yu.edu/faculty-articles/291
WHERE CORPORATIONS ARE: WHY CASUAL VISITS TO NEW YORK ARE BAD FOR BUSINESS

Jeanne L. Schroeder* & David Gray Carlson

Some time prior to 1881, the president of the Terre Haute Car & Manufacturing Co. was traveling through New York on his way to a seaside resort when he was served with process in a civil suit against his company.1 The president was "not in his official capacity or upon any business of the defendant."2 The company, "being a foreign corporation, had no place of business, and transacted no business, and had no property within this State."3

Most lawyers today would say that New York courts could not compel this corporation to stand trial in New York. But, this being the nineteenth century, before the days of International Shoe v. Washington,4 the New York Court of Appeals in Pope v. Terre Haute Car & Manufacturing Co. happily imposed jurisdiction on the corporation.5 It never occurred to the Pope court that the United States Constitution might constitute the slightest impediment to the imposition of jurisdiction.6

After International Shoe, such a holding became unthinkable. International Shoe involved a tax on businesses employing salesmen within the state.7 A corporation had resident salesmen and a showroom in Washington.8 The state commenced litigation against the corporation by serving process on its salesmen and mailing notice to International Shoe in St. Louis.9 The Supreme

---

* Professor of Law, Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law.
 Professor of Law, Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law. Special thanks to Dan Korff-Korn for excellent research help.

2 Id.
3 Id.
5 Pope, 87 N.Y. at 141.
6 See id. at 139–41.
7 Int'l Shoe Co., 326 U.S. at 321.
8 Id. at 314–15.
9 Id. at 312.
Court upheld jurisdiction of the Washington courts because the defendant had “minimum contacts with [Washington] such that the maintenance of the suit [did] not offend ‘traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.’” In so holding, the Court remarked that “the casual presence of the corporate agent or even his conduct of single or isolated items of activities in a state in the corporation’s behalf [would not have been] enough to subject it to suit on causes of action unconnected with the activities there.”

Many examples—three at the United States Supreme Court level—can be given in which the casual visit by an officer of a corporation that was not otherwise doing business in New York was an insufficient peg on which to hang the hat of New York jurisdiction. The Restatement (Second) of Conflicts of Laws summarizes the matter in the following illustration:

A brings an action in state X against the B corporation which was incorporated in state Y. Process is served in X upon C, the president of the B corporation, who happens to be temporarily in X on his own private business. The court does not thereby acquire jurisdiction over B.

It would appear Pope is no longer infallible law in New York. Yet, in 2010, the New York Court of Appeals in Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor revives its holding in Pope and once again took the position that a casual quite enough to sus company not otherwise again, as if Internation

How could the Falo primitive days of 1881, for bringing foreign bu answer is that, given court failed to appr The case involved a pre to be an exercise in qt therefore viewed the things, not over persons on in personam jurisd contacts with New York visits to New York by a submit the company to that flies to New York to his company at the merc

Because the Falor dec and one dictum of the visits by an officer do no company, Falor must b followed or cited in New not even be accorded res and credit in other states

But there is more! “possession” in New Y

---

10 Id. at 316 (quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463 (1940)) (other citations omitted).
11 Intl Shoe Co., 326 U.S. at 317 (emphasis added) (citing Old Wayne Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U.S. 8, 21 (1907); St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U.S. 360, 360 (1882); Frene v. Louisville Cement Co., 134 F.2d 511, 515 (D.C. Cir. 1943)).
13 The Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § 42 illus. 1 (1971).
ton courts because the Washington courts remarked that the additional notions of fairness or even his conduct in the corporation's state it to suit on causes of Conflicts of Laws:

the B corporation process is served in X ion, who happens to business. The court law in New York. Yet, Hotel 71 Mezz Lender and once again took the (1940) (other citations omitted).

Citing Old Wayne Life Ass'n v. 3. 350, 358, 360 (1882); Frene v.

15 Id. at 307, 926 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
16 See id.
17 Id. at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
18 Id. at 311, 926 N.E.2d at 1207, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 703.
19 Id. at 310, 926 N.E.2d at 1207, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702 (emphasis added) ("The provisional remedy of attachment, which is governed by CPLR article 62, operates only against the property of the defendant, not on his/her person.").
20 Id. at 311–12, 926 N.E.2d at 1207–08, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 703.
21 Id.
23 Carter G. Bishop, LLC Charging Orders: A Jurisdictional and Governing Law Quagmire, 12 J. BUS. ENTITIES 14, 21 (2010) ("If personal jurisdiction over the LLC is required and does not exist in the state of the judgment where a creditor seeks a charging order, the LLC would presumably be privileged to ignore the order even if it is domesticated in the LLC's state of formation.").
encompasses intangible property. It does so because it felt compelled by the United States Constitution to so define it. We shall show that this is completely erroneous. The Constitution does not require the states to adopt a specific theory of property.

In short, the Falor court violates the Constitution by imposing jurisdiction over a company with no minimum contacts with New York. In addition, it purports to change New York property law based on a non-existent constitutional principle.

To establish these propositions, this article is divided into six parts. First, we review the confusing facts in Falor, emphasizing that the source of confusion was the fact that the "proper garnishee" in the case had consented to New York jurisdiction for himself, but not for the entities of which he was agent. Second, we review the nature of prejudgment attachment in New York, much humbled since Shaffer v. Heitner required that a defendant have minimum contacts with a state before a quasi in rem jurisdiction can be asserted against his things. Third, we review the little understood law of uncertificated securities and limited liability company (LLC) interests, which is crucial to the case. Fourth, we examine the paradox of one person being both a defendant in a lawsuit and a garnishee under an order of attachment—mutually exclusive categories under New York law. Fifth, we review the new definition of the word "possession" introduced by the Falor case and show how this definition supplants the definition in the famous case of Harris v. Balk. Ironically, having supplanted the old definition of "possession," the Falor court actually uses Harris v. Balk to change the New York law of situs of intangible property. That is, the Falor court simultaneously disregards and relies on this classic old chestnut. Finally, we set forth the theory of in personam jurisdiction operable in Falor and show that it is unconstitutional. We examine what this means for res judicata in the case going forward and for future cases.

The circumstances of the case:

Appeals likely disjurisdiction over a New York.

Guy T. Mitchel, leader of a group via twenty-two li. Georgia, and Flor equity interests in hundred percent:

Some years bef not one of the two hotel in Chicago. borrowed money would be the plain investors, in their individual "submitted to the York City in any" to the guaranty.

The meaning of the private defendan entities in which interests. Mitche and the other as cl was this dual c.
because it felt so define it. We Constitution does property. A tion by imposing contacts with New York property law divided into six alor, emphasizing proper garnishee” on for himself, but nd, we review the, much humbled it have minimum risdiction can be a little understood y company (LLC) we examine the a lawsuit and a utually exclusive the new definition ase and show how us case of Harris old definition of v. Balk to change y. That is, the on this classic old of in personam unconstitutional. in the case going

I. THE FACTS IN FALOR

The circumstances of Falor are so confusing that the Court of Appeals likely did not understand it was asserting in personam jurisdiction over a foreign company with no minimum contacts in New York.

Guy T. Mitchell was a real estate developer in Florida and the leader of a group of investors. Their enterprises were organized via twenty-two limited liability companies chartered in Delaware, Georgia, and Florida. Mitchell and the other investors owned the equity interests in these LLCs. In addition, Mitchell was the one-hundred percent shareholder of a regular Florida corporation.

Some years before, the investors established an additional LLC—not one of the twenty-three garnishees just mentioned—to acquire a hotel in Chicago. To finance this enterprise, the Chicago LLC borrowed money from yet another LLC, Mezz Lender LLC, who would be the plaintiff in the ensuing litigation. As to this loan, all the investors, including Mitchell, signed a guaranty contract in their individual capacities. In the contract, the defendants “submitted to the jurisdiction of any federal or state court in New York City in any suit, action or proceeding arising out of or relating to the guaranty.” Significantly, the twenty-three garnishees were not parties to this guaranty.

The meaning of this agreement was that Mitchell was both a private defendant in his own right and the president of all the entities in which the defendants—including Mitchell—owned equity interests. Mitchell operated in two capacities, one as private citizen and the other as corporate fiduciary of twenty-three garnishees. It was this dual capacity that apparently confused the New York

---

31 See Falor, 58 A.D.3d at 272, 273, 69 N.Y.S.2d at 62, 64; id. at 277, 69 N.Y.S.2d at 66 (Saxe, J., dissenting). Besides Mitchell, the defendants include Robert D. Falor, David Falor, Chris M. Falor, Jennifer Falor and Geoffrey L. Hockman. Id. at 277, 69 N.Y.S.2d at 66.
32 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
33 Id.
34 Id. Eight of the LLCs were chartered in Florida, nine in Georgia, and five in Delaware.
35 See Falor, 58 A.D.3d at 277, 869 N.Y.S.2d at 67.
36 See Falor, 58 A.D.3d at 272, 869 N.Y.S.2d at 62 (majority opinion).
37 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 307, 926 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
38 Id.
38 Id.
39 See Falor, 58 A.D.3d at 272, 869 N.Y.S.2d at 62.
40 See id. at 273, 869 N.Y.S.2d at 64.
Court of Appeals as to the impact and significance of International Shoe.

The Chicago enterprise soon turned sour and the Chicago LLC was bankrupt. The plaintiff brought suit in Supreme Court, New York County against all of the defendants on their guaranty obligation.

In this litigation, the plaintiff sought to take the deposition of Mitchell. Simultaneously, it sought an order of attachment against property of the defendants. The plaintiff's idea was to place a lien on the equity interests of all the defendants in the LLCs and in Mitchell's wholly-owned corporation. In an ex parte hearing, the supreme court granted the order of attachment in an ex parte proceeding, but the court delayed levy by the sheriff until after a hearing on the merits of the attachment.

Meanwhile, Mitchell came to New York to attend the requested deposition, which was held in the supreme court's Manhattan courthouse. The deposition was scheduled just before the hearing on the order of attachment.

After the deposition recessed, Mitchell personally attended the attachment hearing. At the hearing, the court approved the order of attachment. On the spot, with the court's permission, a sheriff's deputy served Mitchell with the order of attachment.

II. ATTACHMENT IN NEW YORK

Once glorious and powerful, quasi in rem jurisdiction has become a mediocre backwater. In the golden age of the "power" theory of jurisdiction, a state could render judgment if it had power over a defendant or over a defendant's property. New York in particular raised quasi in rem garnishments of underlying tort and bore no connection to the defendant's contacts with the state. These two theories are inappropriate as bases for jurisdiction under the "power" theory of jurisdiction. In Shaffer v. Heitner, the Supreme Court held that a mere contractual relationship between the nonresident and the nonconsensual forum court is not enough to establish jurisdiction. As a result, attachment has little or no present hold over the power over him or his property in the forum state. This was accomplished by a Montana company's obligation to do business in New York in order to assert it to seize the defendant's property. We dispense with the "power" theory and instead base jurisdiction on "fairness, rather than on the "power" of the forum state.

---

41 Id. at 193, 869 N.Y.S.2d at 63. Judgment would eventually be entered at $52,404,466.54. Falor, 14 N.Y.2d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 700.
42 Id.; see N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6211(a) (2013). ("An order of attachment may be granted without notice, before or after service of the summons and at any time prior to judgment.").
43 See Falor, 14 N.Y.2d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 700.
44 Id.
45 Id.
46 Id.; see N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6211(a) (2013). ("An order of attachment may be granted without notice, before or after service of the summons and at any time prior to judgment.").
47 See Falor, 14 N.Y.2d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 700.
48 Id.
49 Id.
50 Id.
51 Id.
raised quasi in rem jurisdiction to a high art when it permitted garnishments of national insurance companies, even though the underlying tort against which the insurance company had insured bore no connection with New York.53

The “power” theory soon found competition from the “minimum contacts” theory of International Shoe v. Washington, which turned on fairness, rather than on power.54 For our purposes, the theory of International Shoe may be expressed as follows: if a defendant enjoys the benefit of a state’s legal protection, then it is fair that the defendant suffer the burden of answering claims against it in that state.55

These two theories—power and fairness—are at war with each other.56 And one casualty of this contradiction was the power of a state to base jurisdiction on the capture of the defendant’s things.

In Shaffer v. Heitner, the Supreme Court barred quasi in rem jurisdiction unless there was also in personam jurisdiction over the defendant in the minimum contacts sense.57

As a result of Shaffer, lawyerly interest in prejudgment attachment has plummeted. With regard to New York’s statutory regime, prejudgment attachment has become a way to obtain collateral for some future judgment.58 In effect, it provides a nonconsensual lien to secure the claims of otherwise unsecured

53 This was accomplished in the notorious case of Seider v. Roth, where a New York resident sued a Montreal driver for an accident in Vermont by attaching the insurance company’s obligation to defend the driver, where the insurance company was present and doing business in New York. Seider v. Roth, 17 N.Y.2d 111, 112, 216 N.E.2d 312, 313, 269 N.Y.S.2d 99, 100 (1966), overruled by Rush v. Savchuk, 444 U.S. 320, 332 (1980). Though Seider was effectively overruled, nevertheless, the case continues to have a strange and lingering effect on New York civil procedure. See David Gray Carlson, Critique of Money Judgment (Part Two: Liens on New York Personal Property), 83 ST. JOHNS L. REV. 43, 91–95, 104–06 (2009).

55 See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 472 (1985).

56 See Von Mehren, supra note 52, at 285.

57 Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 206, 212 (1977). Incomprehensibly, even though minimum contacts have trumped power over things, it has not done so over persons, according to a plurality of the Supreme Court. Burnham v. Superior Court, 495 U.S. 604, 619 (1990) (Scalia, J., plurality opinion).

58 See Carlson, supra note 53, at 63.
creditors. The Falor court thought (erroneously) that collateral—not jurisdiction—was the only thing at stake in the dispute before it.

Having collateral is no small thing, in a nation where the average bankruptcy dividend to non-priority unsecured creditors approaches zero. But New York and federal law combine to reduce the value of prejudgment attachment. First of all—by New York law—a plaintiff must show that the defendant is either a crook or a foreigner, equally loathsome in the eyes of New York CPLR. ‘Honest’ domiciliaries are quite immune from attachment, even if they are broke. In a case of a crook or a foreigner, a New York court apparently has discretion to deny prejudgment attachment, if it does not think the plaintiff needs collateral.

59 Id. at 47–48.
60 Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor, 14 N.Y.3d 303, 312, 926 N.E.2d 1202, 1208, 900 N.Y.S.2d 698, 703 (2010), rev’g 58 A.D.3d 270, 869 N.Y.S.2d 61 (App. Div. 1st Dep’t 2008) ("This is not a case where attachment was used to confer quasi in rem jurisdiction over a nondomiciliary based on his/her in-state property. This attachment only served a security function (to ensure there would be sufficient money to satisfy a judgment if plaintiff prevailed.").
62 On this prong, the plaintiff must show:
   2. the defendant resides or is domiciled in the state and cannot be personally served despite diligent efforts to do so; or
   3. the defendant, with intent to defraud his creditors or frustrate the enforcement of a judgment that might be rendered in plaintiff’s favor, has assigned, disposed of, encumbered or secreted property, or removed it from the state or is about to do any of these acts; or
   4. the action is brought by the victim or the representative of the victim of a crime . . . .
63 Here, the plaintiff must show that
   1. the defendant is a nondomiciliary residing without the state, or is a foreign corporation not qualified to do business in the state; or . . .
   5. the cause of action is based on a judgment, decree or order of a court of the United States or of any other court which is entitled to full faith and credit in this state, or on a judgment which qualifies for recognition under the provisions of article 53.
64 See C.P.L.R. 6201.
65 See, e.g., Ames v. Clifford, 863 F. Supp. 175, 177 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (citations omitted) ("New York courts have required an additional showing that something, whether it is a defendant's financial position or past and present conduct, poses a real risk to the enforceability of a future judgment."). The Ames court went so far as to suggest that, in the absence of such discretion, New York law might violate the constitutional right of nondomiciliaries to equal protection of the laws. Id. See also Thornapple Assocs., Inc. v. Sahagon, No. 06 Civ. 6412(JPK), 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 17370, at *7 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007) (finding that the court may still deny prejudgment attachment even if the plaintiff meets the statutory requirements of CPLR sections 6201(1) and 6212(a)); Elliott Assocs., L.P. v. Republic of Peru, 948 F. Supp. 1203, 1211 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (explaining that it is up to the discretion of the court to consider an additional showing that something, whether it is a defendant’s financial position or past and present conduct, poses a real risk to the enforceability of a future judgment.").
that collateral—

here the average

litigants approaches

reduce the value

aw York law—a crook or a

aw York CPLR.

achment, even if

a, New York

attachment, if

1. E. 2d 1202, 1208, 900

2. Div. 1st Dep't 2008)

vm jurisdiction over a

only served a security

judgment if plaintiff

scious L. Bankr.,

secured-creditors (last

he enforcement of a

signed, disposed of,

s about to do any of im of a crime . . . .

to, or is a foreign

court of the United

in this state, or on a

cle 53. Act. See N.Y. C.P.L.R.

94) (citations omitted)
thing, whether it is a

a real risk to the

to suggest that, in the

tutional right of non-

apple Assocs., Inc. v.

D.N.Y. Mar. 12, 2007)
the plaintiff meets the illott Assocs., L.P. v.

ng that it is up to the Second, even where a plaintiff manages to wheedle a prejudgment lien from the New York courts, such a lien is void as a preference in a federal bankruptcy if the debtor files a bankruptcy petition shortly after the lien is created. 66 It is no doubt typically the case that a lawsuit is triggered precisely because a debtor is insolvent and cannot pay. 67 Under these circumstances, the prejudgment attachment lien may simply serve to provoke a bankruptcy case. 68

Because the Falor court is a prejudgment attachment case, it is tempting to ignore it for the reason that it poles its way through in the foetid, insalubrious backwaters of a law that few people really care about anymore. But appearances are deceiving; there is an important overlap between quasi in rem and in personam jurisdiction.

The overlap is this: if a defendant's property is an intangible debt owed to the defendant by a garnishee, then in rem jurisdiction over this debt depends on New York's in personam jurisdiction over the garnishee. As Professor Walter Kennedy long ago observed:

If the garnishee were a foreign corporation, additional proof that the garnishee expressly or impliedly submitted to the laws of [New York] must be furnished before the creditor could validly subject the foreign corporation to the process of this state. These basic ingredients must be satisfied as preliminary conditions in order to reach this same debt by way of attachment; the right of the plaintiff to garnish is a derivative right which he must trace out through the defendant. The garnishee being a non-resident, orthodox principles of the common law and the constitutional mandate of due process will prevent the principal plaintiff from reaching over the head of the defendant and seizing the latter's credits in the hands of a non-resident garnishee. 69 discretion of the courts to deny prejudgment attachments); Reading & Bates Corp. v. Nat'l Iranian Oil Co., 478 F. Supp. 724, 726 (S.D.N.Y. 1979) (discussing that the court has discretion over the remedy of attachment); Maitrejean v. Levon Props. Corp., 45 A.D.2d 1020, 1020–21, 358 N.Y.S.2d 205, 205 (App. Div. 2d Dep't 1974) (reversing supreme court for granting a lien against a foreign corporation, where corporation was highly liquid); see also N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6223(a) (McKinney 2013) ("If, after the defendant has appeared in the action, the court determines that the attachment is unnecessary to the security of the plaintiff, it shall vacate the order of attachment.").

It is precisely into this overlap that the Falor holding fits.

67 See In re Sadler, 935 F.2d 918, 919 (7th Cir. 1991).
68 Id.
69 Walter B. Kennedy, Garnishment of Intangible Debts in New York, 35 YALE L.J. 689, 693 (1926) (footnotes omitted).
Because Falor inhabits this intersection between quasi in rem and in personam jurisdiction, whatever law Falor establishes applies fully to any in personam claim by any New York plaintiff against any foreign debtor. In effect, Falor stands for the proposition that any state with power over a corporate agent has power over the corporation, even if the agent’s presence in New York is completely unrelated to the scope of the agent’s authority.

III. UNCERTIFICATED SECURITIES

An important fact in Falor is that none of the twenty-three garnishees issued certificated securities to the defendants. Publicly traded corporations almost universally issue certificated securities. In the case of such corporations, few shareholders choose to hold certificates, though they have the right to do so. Rather, publicly held corporations issue a “jumbo certificate” that is held in New York by the Depository Trust Company (DTC). In its computerized records, the DTC allocates pro rata interests to brokers, who allocate pro rata interests of its customers. Although investors think they own stock, in fact they are typically many times removed from the certificated securities issued by the corporation. What investors in securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange typically own are “security entitlements” as defined in Part 5 of Article 8 of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC).

Closely held corporations often issue certificates, which are indeed physically held by the shareholder or some bailee of the shareholder. For example, in the recent case of Koehler v. Bank of Bermuda Ltd., the Bank of Ber physically held i a federal judgm Yorke 1st Circuit—ruled tl York, a New Yo bank and theref back from Bern Koehler is an ir example, that compelled to r anywhere in the eventual sale. Koehler at lea in New York, an the bank. In f in New York, a nevertheless.

A. L

Where certif...
quasi in rem and tablishes applies plaintiff against proposition that power over the york is completely

the twenty-three he defendants, issue certificated few shareholders right to do so. In its "certificate" that is ny (DTC). In its "ata interests to mers. Although e typically many s issued by the on the New York ments" as defined ofe (UCC). sates, which are me bailee of the Koehler v. Bank of Bermuda Ltd., a Maryland defendant pledged actual certificates to the Bank of Bermuda in exchange for a loan. The shares were physically held in Bermuda. The plaintiff succeeded in obtaining a federal judgment in Maryland, which was domesticated in New York federal court. The New York Court of Appeals—responding to a certified question from the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit—ruled that, since the Bank of Bermuda did business in New York, a New York court would have personal jurisdiction over the bank and therefore could compel the bank to fetch the certificates back from Bermuda, where a federal marshal could sell them. Koehler is an interesting case on its own. We may expect, for example, that airlines doing business in New York may be compelled to remove the luggage of defendants from flights anywhere in the world, so that the New York sheriff may hold it for eventual sale. Be that as it may, for our much narrower purpose, in Koehler at least the garnishee bank was qualified to do business in New York, and so the court clearly had personal jurisdiction over the bank. In Falor, the twenty-three garnishees were not present in New York, and yet the court imposed jurisdiction over them nevertheless.

A. Levying on Uncertificated Equity Interests

Where certificates exist, the sheriff can levy them and sell them.

81 Id. at 536, 911 N.E.2d at 827, 883 N.Y.S.2d at 765.
82 Id.
83 Id.
84 Id. at 537, 541, 911 N.E.2d at 828, 831, 883 N.Y.S.2d at 766, 769.
86 In the context of pre-judgment attachment, only the luggage of those defendants with minimum contacts with New York may be removed by the garnished airline. See supra note 25 and accompanying text.
87 Koehler, 12 N.Y.3d at 540, 911 N.E.2d at 830, 883 N.Y.S.2d at 768. Koehler involved certificated shares of stock. A rather different issue is where a creditor could garnish a bank account where the bank is doing business in New York, but the bank account is maintained at a branch outside New York. This entails an ancient doctrine according to which every bank branch is a separate entity for purposes of garnishment. The doctrine may or may not still endure. See Geoffrey Sant, The Rejection of the Separate Entity Rule Validates the Separate Entity Rule, 65 S.M.U.L. REV. 813 (2012).
89 See generally David Gray Carlson & Carlton M. Smith, New York Tax Warrants: In the
In Falor, however, there were no certificates. In such a case, how should the sheriff proceed?

Falor involved a New York levy of a prejudgment order of attachment. According to CPLR section 6202, "[a]ny debt or property against which a money judgment may be enforced as provided in section 5201 is subject to attachment." Section 5201 in turn distinguishes between debts and property. Debts are statutorily defined as "any debt, which is past due or which is yet to become due, certainly or upon demand of the judgment debtor, whether it was incurred within or without the state, to or from a resident or non-resident." An LLC owes no debt to its members. If it authorizes a dividend, however, its obligation to pay the dividend would constitute a debt. But no corporation (and, by analogy, no limited liability company) has a contractual obligation to issue dividends. So equity shares, whether certificated or not, are not typically debts, in the New York sense. Rather, equity interests are "any property which could be assigned or transferred, whether it consists of a present or future right or interest and whether or not it is vested."

CPLR section 5201 goes on to provide different rules for certificated and uncertificated shares of stock. According to the CPLR, "[w]here property ... is evidenced by ... a certificate of stock of an association or corporation ... the person holding it shall be the garnishee." In the case of uncertificated securities, CPLR section 5201(c)(1) provides:

> Where property consists of a right or share in the stock of an association or corporation, or interests or profits therein, for

---

Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.

Id. at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700–01.

Compare N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5201(a) (McKinney 2013), with C.P.L.R. 5201(b).

C.P.L.R. 5201(a).

Id. at 615.

Fifth Third Bank v. United States, 518 F.3d 1368, 1380 (Fed. Cir. 2008).

C.P.L.R. 5201(b). In the post-judgment context, "property" is divided into property (i) capable or (iii) not capable of delivery, a distinction not utilized in Article 62. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5202(a), 5202 (McKinney 2013).

Compare C.P.L.R. 5201(c)(1), with C.P.L.R. 5201(c)(4).

C.P.L.R. 5201(c)(4). Delaware has a different situs rule. Even if certificates are outstanding, the situs of shares is in Delaware. Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 192 (1977) (construing DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 8, § 169 (1975)).
such a case, how judgment order of 133 U.S. 186, 192 (1977)

which a certificate of stock . . . is not outstanding, the corporation, or the president or treasurer of the association on behalf of the association, shall be the garnishee. 101

It was under this statute that the sheriff garnished Mitchell. 102 Section 5201(e) is unfortunately worded. In Falor, Mitchell was president of twenty-three garnishees that had issued uncertificated membership interests which would presumably fall within the meaning of the term “shares of stock.” 103 According to section 5201(c)(1), Mitchell is the garnishee. 104 Properly, Mitchell is not the garnishee. He is the agent of twenty-three different garnishees. 105 Mitchell is not the garnishee because Mitchell does not owe the defendants any debt, nor does he have custody of their property. 106
The LLCs, not Mitchell, issued uncertificated securities to the defendants. 107 What section 5201(c)(1) should have said is that a company issuing uncertificated securities is effectively garnished when the president or treasurer as agent of the company is served with the order of attachment.

B. Article 8

The phrase “uncertificated securities” implies that Article 8 of the UCC applies. According to UCC section 8-103, “[a] share or similar equity interest issued by a corporation . . . is a security.” 108 One of the garnishees in Falor was not an LLC but was a Florida corporation that has issued uncertificated securities. 109 As to this one garnishee, UCC section 8-112(b) provides: “[t]he interest of a debtor in an uncertificated security may be reached by a creditor only by legal process upon the issuer at its chief executive office in the United States, except as otherwise provided in subsection (d).” 110

With regard to this one garnishee, the plaintiff was obligated to

---

101 C.P.L.R. 5201(c)(1).
103 Id.
104 See C.P.L.R. 5201(c)(1).
105 See Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
106 The CPLR requires a garnishee to be “a person who owes a debt to a judgment debtor, or a person other than the judgment debtor who has property in his possession or custody in which a judgment debtor has an interest.” N.Y. C.P.L.R. 105(i) (McKinney 2013).
107 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
108 U.C.C. § 8-103(a) (2012).
109 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
110 U.C.C. § 8-112(b) (2012) (emphasis added). Again, subsection (d) gives advice only as to uncertificated securities encumbered by a security interest under Article 9. See U.C.C. § 8-112(d).
travel to Florida and use Florida process only. In upholding the order of attachment, the Falor court seems to have ignored section 8-112(b) entirely. Properly, section 8-112(b) should have compelled the supreme court to deny the Falor plaintiff an order of attachment with regard to the Florida corporation. The plaintiff's remedy was limited to obtaining Florida legal process.

C. LLC Interests

It is not clear, however, that this provision applied to the twenty-two LLC garnishees in Falor. The Falor court refers to the defendants' "uncertificated ownership interests." UCC section 8-112(b) applies to securities. According to section 8-103(c), "an interest in a . . . limited liability company is not a security unless it is dealt in or traded on securities exchanges or in securities markets, its terms expressly provide that it is a security governed by this Article, or it is an investment company security." That is, the status of membership interests in LLCs as uncertificated securities is elective. The Falor court never says that the defendants' equity interests in the LLCs are uncertificated securities. If they were, the order of attachment was quite illegitimate, in light of section 8-112(b). We will assume, as the Falor court did sub silentio, that Article 8 does not apply to the LLC garnishees.

In Falor, Mitchell, as owner of the LLCs, was the proper garnishee, and delivery of the order of attachment to him supposedly constituted a levy. What precisely is a levy?

1. Levies in New York

A levy is what section 6214(b) says it is—no more, no less. According to the third sentence of CPLR section 6214(b):

Unless the court orders otherwise, the person served with the order of attachment, an amount specified and executed transfer or d

This sentence garnishee shoul the debt is extit twice. But w garnishee is to can this mean i

2. Charging Or the order shall forthwith transfer or deliver all such property, and pay all such debts upon maturity, up to the amount specified in the order of attachment, to the sheriff and execute any document necessary to effect the payment, transfer or delivery.\textsuperscript{120}

This sentence, as applied to debts, is perfectly coherent. The garnishee should simply pay the sheriff. If the garnishee does so, the debt is extinguished, and the garnishee cannot be made to pay twice.\textsuperscript{121} But with regard to property not capable of delivery, the garnishee is to “transfer all such property” to the sheriff.\textsuperscript{122} What can this mean in the case of an LLC?

2. Charging Orders

In Delaware, Georgia, and Florida, where the \textit{Falor} LLCs were located, LLC interests are assignable, “except as provided in the articles of organization or operating agreement.”\textsuperscript{123}

This language is somewhat misleading, however. The statute clarifies that an “assignee of a member's interest shall have no right to participate in the management of the business and affairs of a limited liability company except as provided in the articles of organization or operating agreement” and then only upon either the approval of other members of the LLC or the satisfaction of other conditions in the agreement.\textsuperscript{124} In other words, without an authorizing provision in the operable LLC agreement, a member can not transfer the full ownership of her LLC interest, only her right “to share in such profits and losses, to receive such distribution or distributions, and to receive such allocation of income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit or similar item to which the assignor was entitled, to the extent assigned.”\textsuperscript{125}

Therefore, in \textit{Falor}, it is possible the garnishment cannot result in the outright sale of the defendants’ equity interests. Or, even if a sale is permitted, management power remains in the member-debtor and does not pass to the buyer, who simply obtains the right

\begin{footnotes}
\item \textsuperscript{120} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214(b) (McKinney 2013).
\item \textsuperscript{121} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6204 (McKinney 2013).
\item \textsuperscript{122} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5232(a) (McKinney 2013).
\item \textsuperscript{123} FLA. STAT. § 608.432(1) (2007). For similar exceptions, see DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-702(a) (2005); GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-502(1) (2003).
\item \textsuperscript{124} FLA. STAT. § 608.432(1) (2007). For similar provisions, see DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-702(a) (2005); GA. CODE ANN. §§ 14-11-502(3), 14-11-505 (2003).
\item \textsuperscript{125} FLA. STAT. § 608.432(2)(b) (2007). For similar provisions, see DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-702(b)(2) (2005); GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-502(2) (2003).
\end{footnotes}
to dividends, if the entity ever chooses to issue them.\textsuperscript{126} Even where the operating agreement makes membership interests unassignable, it is still possible for judgment creditors to obtain charging orders.\textsuperscript{127} A charging order—"historically ... an obscure remedy"—requires the LLC to pay cash distributions (if any) to the judgment creditors who received the charging order.\textsuperscript{128} Accordingly, "the charging order is a weak remedy when the LLC does not generate revenues for distributions or when the LLC's management determines not to make distributions."\textsuperscript{129}

In Delaware, the charging order is the exclusive creditor remedy.\textsuperscript{130} Georgia law makes the charging order non-exclusive, but it also states that a creditor may not "seek an order of the court requiring a foreclosure sale of the [LLC] interest."\textsuperscript{131} Since a foreclosure sale is the pro-creditor alternative to a charging order, Georgia law in effect does not differ from Delaware law.\textsuperscript{132}

Florida law is more complex. As of May 31, 2011, the relevant statutory authority provides:

(a) On application to a court of competent jurisdiction by any judgment creditor of a member or a member's assignee, the court may enter a charging order against the limited liability company interest of the judgment debtor or assignee rights for the unsatisfied amount of the judgment plus interest.

(b) A charging order constitutes a lien on the judgment debtor's limited liability company interest or assignee rights. Under a charging order, the judgment creditor has only the rights of an assignee of a limited liability company interest to receive any distribution or distributions to which the judgment debtor would otherwise have been entitled from the limited liability company, to the extent of the judgment, including interest.\textsuperscript{133} In the case of a limited liability company having more than one member, the remedy of...
foreclosure on a judgment debtor's interest in such limited liability company or against rights to distribution from such limited liability company is not available to a judgment creditor attempting to satisfy the judgment and may not be ordered by a court.

Florida's LLC law goes on to make the charging order the exclusive remedy for LLCs with more than one member. When the LLC is a single member LLC, upon a showing "that distributions under a charging order will not satisfy the judgment within a reasonable time," a sale of the member's interest can be ordered. However:

In the case of a limited liability company having more than one member, the remedy of foreclosure on a judgment debtor's interest in such limited liability company or against rights to distribution from such limited liability company is not available to a judgment creditor attempting to satisfy the judgment and may not be ordered by a court. Florida's recent amendment overrules Olmstead v. Federal Trade Commission, where the Florida Supreme Court held that the charging order was not the exclusive remedy, given the statute in effect in 2010. Non-exclusivity, however, is thought to interfere with Florida's "pick-your-partner" policy—the policy that non-debtor LLC members cannot be made to share management with a stranger who has bought the encumbered membership interest at a foreclosure sale. Perhaps for this reason Florida chose to amend its LLC law.

3. New York Levies as Charging Orders Abroad

In Falor, only the Florida memberships were foreclosable, assuming the 2011 amendment is not retrospective in application. In the other states, the most that could be achieved is a charging order. There is a conflict between the law of New York, on the one hand, and the law of Delaware, Georgia, and (as of May 31, 2011,) Florida, on the other.\textsuperscript{142} The third sentence of New York CPLR section 6214(b) provides “the person served with the order shall forthwith transfer or deliver all such property . . . to the sheriff and execute any document necessary to effect the . . . transfer or delivery.”\textsuperscript{143} The law of the other states directly countermands this language and limits any “judgment creditor” to a charging order.\textsuperscript{144}

Two issues arise, however. The first is whether a New York order of attachment would be recognized in the other states as a “charging order.”\textsuperscript{145} The matter is clear in Georgia that the New York attachment would be upheld, whether it constitutes a charging order or not.\textsuperscript{146} According to Georgia Code section 14-11-504(b):

The [charging order] remedy . . . shall not be deemed exclusive of others which may exist, including, without limitation, the right of a judgment creditor to reach the limited liability company interest of the member by process of garnishment served on the limited liability company, provided that, except as otherwise provided in the articles of organization or a written operating agreement, a judgment creditor shall have no right under this chapter or any other state law to interfere with the management of force dissolution of a limited liability company or to seek an order of the court requiring a foreclosure sale of the limited liability company interest.\textsuperscript{147}

This section and the comparable statutes from Delaware and Florida refer to “judgment creditors,” not to plaintiffs seeking pre-judgment attachment.\textsuperscript{148} We presume that the phrase “judgment creditors” would be interpreted by courts to include plaintiffs, who aspire to become judgment creditors and who, in the meantime, seek pre-judgment attachment.

\textsuperscript{142} Compare DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-703, FLA. STAT. § 608.433, and GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-504, with N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214 (McKinney 2013).

\textsuperscript{143} C.P.L.R. 6214(b).

\textsuperscript{144} See DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-703(a); GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-504(a); FLA. STAT. § 608.433(4)(b). All three statutes refer to judgment creditors, rather than plaintiffs who do not yet have judgments. See DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-703(a); FLA. STAT. § 608.433(4)(b); GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-504(a). Presumably, the courts of these states would extend the exclusivity rule to pre-judgment attachment, though the matter is not absolutely certain.

\textsuperscript{145} DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-703; FLA. STAT. § 608.433 (failing by both statutes to state whether the remedy provided is exclusive of all other jurisdictions).

\textsuperscript{146} GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-504(b).

\textsuperscript{147} Id. (citations omitted).

\textsuperscript{148} See DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 18-703(a); FLA. STAT. § 608.433(4)(a); GA. CODE ANN. § 14-11-504(b).
Georgia Code section 14-11-504(b) clearly indicates that court orders that are not styled “charging orders” will nevertheless be competent to obligé the LLC to pay actually voted to the sheriff all dividends that it may choose to authorize. This is less clear in Delaware or Florida. Given that the charging order requirement is based on vindicating the “pick-your-partner” principle, courts in these states would be well justified in upholding the New York order of attachment as charging orders encumbering the defendants’ right to receive dividends actually authorized by the LLC. The precise statutory language that justifies this conclusion comes from the second and third sentences of section 6214(b):

\[\text{[A]ll debts of [the defendant], including any specified in the notice, then due and thereafter coming due to the defendant, shall be subject to the levy. Unless the court orders otherwise, the person served with the order shall forthwith...}\]

4. Full Faith and Credit

Assuming that the order of attachment qualifies as a charging order under the law of Delaware and Florida, a second issue is posed. New York law commands the garnishee to transfer the shares in their entirety to the sheriff. The laws of Delaware, Georgia, and Florida prohibit this remedy. Given that New York (supposedly) has obtained jurisdiction over the person of the LLCs, is New York’s order of attachment entitled to full faith and credit in these other states?

Here the answer seems to be no, under the “the enforcement exception” to the Full Faith and Credit Clause. A governing precedent on this exception is Baker v. General Motors Corp., where a Michigan court issued an injunction against a former employee of a defendant from giving testimony against the defendant. The employee was subpoenaed in Missouri, which refused to give full faith and credit to the Michigan injunction. Since the New York order of attachment is basically “injunctive in nature,” Baker establishes that Delaware, Georgia, and Florida need not give full faith and credit to the New York remedy of attachment, though they would be obligated to provide some remedy, assuming that New York had proper jurisdiction over the LLCs. And, of course, a local charging order would be a remedy, though one that is less adequate than what New York would supply.

5. Summary

To summarize, the meaning of the order of attachment in Falor (in its pre-judgment life) was that, in Delaware and Georgia, if all went well, the plaintiff would have charging orders against the twenty-three LLC garnishees—a rather second-rate remedy. In Florida, provided the 2011 amendment to the LLC law is prospective only, the order of attachment could have effectuated a foreclosure of all the defendants’ membership interests. But all this presumes that the New York court had personal jurisdiction over the LLCs.

IV. GARNISHEES AND DEFENDANTS

The key to the Falor case is the mode of the sheriff’s levy. According to CPLR section 6214(a), “[t]he sheriff shall levy upon any interest of the defendant in personal property . . . by serving a copy of the order of attachment upon the garnishee, or upon the defendant if property to be levied upon is in the defendant’s possession or custody.” To be noted is that the sheriff must personally serve a garnishee or a defendant. Furthermore, the order of attachment must “direct the sheriff to levy within his jurisdiction.” T makes explicit “jurisdiction,” as “a person other possession or control.” Section debtor are mutual judgment debtor invokes the law of Falor, however, the order of attachment. There were only debtors in the future that “for the purposes of a judgment debtor invokes the law of Falor, however, the order of attachment.

We come now court. Mitchell was the guarantor or defendant, Mitchel the defendant’s personal

In addition, he could not be interpreted it.

---

1160 Albany Law Review [Vol. 76.2

156 Id. at 230.
157 McGarry, supra note 86, at 1582.
159 See, e.g., F LA. STAT. § 608.433(4)(b) (2012).
161 See FLA. STAT. § 608.433(4).
162 Id. § 608.433(4)(a) (“On application to a court of competent jurisdiction . . . “) (emphasis added).
163 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214(a) (McKinney 2013).
164 C.P.L.R. 6214(a)
used to give full

lly "injunctive ingia, and Florida
York remedy of provide some

diction over the
ld be a remedy,
w York would

as the sheriff is indeed limited to his "jurisdiction," which presumably means the county of the supreme court for which the sheriff serves.

We must also register another important conceptual point. "Garnishee" is a term expressly defined by the CPLR section 105(i) as "a person other than the judgment debtor who has property in his possession or custody in which a judgment debtor has an interest." Section 105(i) establishes "garnishee" and "judgment debtor" are mutually exclusive categories. One cannot be both a judgment debtor and a garnishee at the same time. The CPLR invokes the law of the excluded middle.

Falor, however, is a prejudgment attachment case. At the time of the order of attachment, there were no judgment debtors yet. There were only defendants who would indeed become judgment debtors in the future. CPLR section 6202, however, makes clear that "for the purpose of applying the provisions to attachment, references to a 'judgment debtor' in section 5201 and in subdivision (i) of section shall be construed to mean 'defendant.'" Accordingly, in attachment cases, the legislature intended to draw a mutually exclusive distinction between garnishees and defendants.

We come now to the heart of darkness that blinded the Falor court. Mitchell was a defendant. As a defendant, he had agreed in the guaranty contract to submit to a New York forum. As a defendant, Mitchell was subject to levy by the sheriff of property "in the defendant's possession or custody." In addition, Mitchell was the garnishee (or, to be more accurate, the agent of twenty-three different garnishees). As "garnishee," he could not be a defendant, given the definition (as we have interpreted it) in CPLR section 105(i).

165 N.Y.C.P.L.R. 6211(a) (McKinney 2013).
166 Carlson, supra note 53, at 79–80.
170 See id.
172 See C.P.L.R. 6202.
173 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 307, 926 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
174 Id.
175 N.Y.C.P.L.R. 6214(a) (McKinney 2013).
176 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
177 See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 105(i) (McKinney 2013).
Could Mitchell be both? It is possible to develop a theory whereby Mitchell the fiduciary is a person separate and apart from Mitchell the private citizen. If so, Mitchell the fiduciary has a duty to the court to assure that the LLC garnishees pay all distributions to the sheriff. Such a theory imposes a split personality on Mitchell. This theory would naturally follow, if CPLR section 5201(c)(1) had referred to the president of an LLC as an agent of a garnishee. Then clearly Mitchell as agent is different from Mitchell as defendant.

Even if our Jekyll-and-Hyde theory is rejected, we may still observe that Mitchell was served with the order of attachment as garnishee for the other defendants (but not for himself). He was also served as a defendant on the theory that Mitchell was in possession or custody of his own property.

V. MITCHELL AS "POSSESSOR OF INTANGIBLE PROPERTY"

Mitchell, then, wore twenty-four hats. He was a fiduciary for twenty-three garnishees, and he wore one hat as a defendant supposedly in possession of his own personal property. In this section, we examine the private hat of Mitchell as a defendant allegedly in possession of his own property.

The Falor court ruled that the garnishment of Mitchell as private citizen and as garnishee was valid. According to the court:

- a court with personal jurisdiction over a nondomiciliary present in New York has jurisdiction over that individual's tangible or intangible property, even if the situs of the property is outside New York. Because personal jurisdiction was properly asserted over . . . Mitchell, Supreme Court had the authority to order pre-judgment attachment of the property defendant Mitchell owned and/or controlled, and service of the order upon him while he was in New York was appropriate.

Notice, in this passage, that the court blurs private Mitchell with fiduciary Mitchell. As a private citizen, Mitchell "owned" his own equity interests in the twenty-three garnishees. As a fiduciary

---

178 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 307, 928 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
179 See id. at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
180 Id. at 314-15, 318, 926 N.E.2d at 1210, 1212, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 705-06, 708 (citing Harris v. Balk, 198 U.S. 215, 222-23 (1905)).
181 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 312, 926 N.E.2d at 1208, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 704 (emphasis added).
182 Id. at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
183 See id.
184 See supra text ante.
185 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 307, 928 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
186 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214 (b).
187 See S. Carbon Co. A.D. 1004, 16 N.Y.S.2d 577, with it the idea of the person to whose custody 188 C.P.L.R. 6214(e).
189 Id.
190 Id.
191 See supra text ante defendant).
a theory whereby art from Mitchell has a duty to the distributions to the Mitchell. This 5201(c)(1) had of a garnishee. from Mitchell as id, we may still attachment as itself). He was Mitchell was in a fiduciary for as a defendant property. In this as a defendant Mitchell as private the court: on domiciliary t individual’s situs of the al jurisdiction me Court had ment of the ntrolled, and New York was ate Mitchell with “owned” his own 2 As a fiduciary agent of the twenty-two LLCs, he “controlled” the distribution of dividends issued by the LLCs. In addition, if we buy into the schizophrenic solution suggested earlier, Mitchell was the proper garnishee for himself and could transfer his own equity interests over to the sheriff. But we put aside fiduciary Mitchell, for the moment, and consider only the private Mitchell.

PROPERTY

We have seen that a sheriff may levy property directly from a “defendant if property to be levied upon is in the defendant’s possession or custody.” So without question, the sheriff’s delivery of the order of attachment was a levy of at least Mitchell’s own equity interests in the LLCs—if and only if Mitchell was in possession or custody of them. “Custody” is not a defined term. We may define it, however, as “control.”

One of the odd lapses in the CPLR is that it does not define what a levy from a defendant is. To be sure, in eight long and complex sentences, we learn about what a levy is for a garnishee. But none of these rules apply to a non-garnishee. There are simply no rules at all for levying directly from a defendant. In one respect, there is a positive aspect to this for the plaintiff. A levy of a garnishee lasts for only ninety days, unless some further action is taken. This ninety-day rule does not expressly apply to defendants.

So then, what must private Mitchell do by virtue of having received the order of attachment? Private Mitchell has no access to the books of the LLCs. Only fiduciary Mitchell does. By way of comparison, suppose Robert Falor, one of Mitchell’s codefendants, had been in the courtroom instead of Mitchell, and suppose the sheriff delivered the order of attachment to Falor. Suppose further that Falor had no direct or indirect power to write checks on behalf of the LLCs. On this assumption, there was nothing that Falor could have done to effectuate the payment of a distribution.

183 See id.
184 See supra text accompanying note 40.
185 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308–09, 926 N.E.2d 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
186 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214(a) (McKinney 2013).
187 See S. Carbon Co. v. State, 171 Misc. 566, 568, 13 N.Y.S.2d 7, 9 (Ct. Cl. 1939), aff’d, 258 A.D. 1004, 16 N.Y.S.2d 719 (App. Div. 3d Dep’t 1940) (noting that the word “custody” “carries with it the idea of the thing being within the immediate personal care and control of the person to whose custody it is subjected”).
188 C.P.L.R. 6214(b).
189 Id.
190 C.P.L.R. 6214(c).
191 See supra text accompanying notes 186–87 (detailing the lack of rules for levying from a defendant).
on Falor would have been a useless act. To be sure, if Falor were enjoined to do something, he could be held in contempt for not doing it. But where in the CPLR is any non-garnishee defendant enjoined to do anything?

Falor undoubtedly has rights against the LLCs if they do elect to issue dividends. In such a case the LLCs would be what Article 9 of the UCC calls “account debtors.”192 Suppose Falor receives a dividend. Must he hand it over to the sheriff? Or, if the LLC refuses to pay Falor, must Falor bring suit against the LLC in order to obtain the funds, which then could be handed to the sheriff? Nothing in the CPLR expressly requires Falor to do this.193

Suppose Falor refuses to hand over the dividend. In the case of a garnishee, the CPLR is clear that the sheriff will not lift a finger to enforce the order of attachment.194 Rather, the plaintiff is expected to bring a turnover proceeding against the garnishee.195 If the action is actually commenced, the levy of a garnishee extends beyond its ordinary ninety-day life.196 But the CPLR does not seem to authorize a turnover action against defendants. According to CPLR section 6214(d): “Where property ... ha[s] been levied upon by service of an order of attachment, the plaintiff may commence a special proceeding against the garnishee served with the order to compel the payment, delivery or transfer to the sheriff of such property . . . .”197 \textit{Ex hypothesi}, Falor is not a garnishee but rather is a defendant. So such a proceeding does not seem to be authorized. In comparison, the CPLR in the post-judgment context does permit turnover proceedings directly against judgment debtors.198

Of course, it was Mitchell, not Falor, who was served.199 Mitchell as president could no doubt cause the LLCs to pay, but private Mitchell could not do this. The \textit{Falor} court, however, ruled that

\begin{itemize}
  \item[192] N.Y. U.C.C. LAW § 9-102(a)(3) (McKinney 2013) (“‘Account debtor’ means a person obliged on an account, chattel paper, or general intangible.”).
  \item[193] See supra text accompanying notes 188–87 (detailing the lack of rules for levying from a defendant).
  \item[194] See Lankenau v. Coggeshall & Hicks, 350 F.2d 61, 65 (2d Cir. 1965) (“[H]aving served the levy and demanded possession, the sheriff had, in a sense, done all he was ordered or entitled to do under the warrant of attachment. It was up to [the plaintiff] to seek to compel the garnishee to turn over the assets.” (citations omitted)).
  \item[195] C.P.L.R. 6214(d).
  \item[196] See C.P.L.R. 6214(e).
  \item[197] C.P.L.R. 6214(d).
  \item[198] N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5225(a) (McKinney 2013).
  \item[200] See id. at 312, 926 N.Y.S.2d at 705.
  \item[201] Id. at 312, 926 N.Y.S.2d at 705.
  \item[202] Alliance Bond Finance Corp. v. Grupo Mexicano De Desarrollo, 914 F.3d 104, 120 (2d Cir. 2018).
  \item[203] Grupo Mexicano De Desarrollo v. Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC, 914 F.3d 104, 120 (2d Cir. 2018).
  \item[204] See Grupo Mexicano De Desarrollo v. Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC, 914 F.3d 104, 120 (2d Cir. 2018).
  \item[205] Id. at 25.
  \item[206] Id. at 21 (emphasis).
  \item[207] C.P.L.R. 5225(a).
  \item[208] See Grupo Mexicano De Desarrollo v. Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC, 914 F.3d 104, 120 (2d Cir. 2018).
  \item[209] See id.
  \item[210] C.P.L.R. 5225(a).
  \item[211] See Grupo Mexicano De Desarrollo v. Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC, 914 F.3d 104, 120 (2d Cir. 2018).
  \item[212] See id.
Private Mitchell had possession of his own equity interests. On the basis of "possession," the levy of private Mitchell could go forward. Can one "possess" intangible property?

The Second Circuit, in Alliance Bond Fund, Inc. v. Grupo Mexicano De Desarrollo S.A., "Erie-guessed" that the answer is yes. In Grupo Mexicano, a judgment creditor sought an order directing the judgment debtor to transfer a receivable owed by the Mexican government to the sheriff. A turnover order pursuant to CPLR section 5225(a) against a judgment debtor is appropriate only if "the judgment debtor is in possession or custody of money or other personal property." Ultimately, the case was remanded to determine whether the receivable "could be assigned or transferred" within the meaning of CPLR section 5201(b). Nevertheless the Grupo Mexicano court also announced that it would "decline the invitation to hold that an asset characterized as property for the purposes of § 5201 is necessarily characterizable as property for purposes of §§ 5225 and 5227 as well." Rather, the court ruled: "A judgment creditor seeking a turnover order therefore must show: First, that the asset it seeks to collect has been made available to judgment creditors by § 5201; and second, that the party against which the creditor has chosen to proceed has the ability to produce the asset."

This second requirement seems merely to be a restatement of section 5225(a)'s requirement that "the judgment debtor [be] in possession or custody of money or other personal property." And so the Grupo Mexicano court seemed to believe that intangible property is capable of possession. On such a view, possession means the legal ability to exclude others, not manucaption of something tangible. This is a definition with which philosophers

---

200 See id. at 312, 926 N.E.2d at 1207–08, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 703–04.
201 Id. at 312, 926 N.E.2d at 1208, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 704.
202 Alliance Bond Fund, Inc. v. Grupo Mexicano de Desarrollo, S.A., 190 F.3d 16 (2d Cir. 1999).
203 Id. at 25 n.9. The Falor case cites Grupo Mexicano favorably, but for a different proposition than what the text describes. Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 313, 926 N.E.2d at 1209, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 705.
204 Grupo Mexicano, 190 F.3d at 19; see N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5225(a) (McKinney 2013).
205 C.P.L.R. 5225(a).
207 Grupo Mexicano, 190 F.3d at 26.
208 Id. at 25.
209 Id. at 21 (emphasis added).
210 C.P.L.R. 5225(a).
211 See Grupo Mexicano, 190 F.3d at 25 n.9.
212 See id.
are most comfortable.213

The Falor court confirms the accuracy of the Second Circuit's Erie guess.214 If indeed the Falor court viewed Mitchell as not the proper garnishee for his own interests in the LLCs, then it must have believed that "possession" is a term that can apply to intangible property.215 And indeed the Falor court refers to the 'defendants' uncertificated ownership interests, which defendant Mitchell possesses or has custody over."216

Here we see confusion afoot in the Falor opinion. Mitchell is said to possess or have custody over all the equity interests of all the defendants.217 But is the court thinking of private Mitchell or Mitchell the fiduciary? We will assume for the moment that the court has private Mitchell in mind.

With regard to private Mitchell, the Falor court declares that Mitchell "possesses" his intangible property.218 In this regard the Falor court puts itself at odds with the United States Supreme Court in Harris v. Balk.219

In this once-seminal case, sometimes thought to have been overruled,220 Harris owed Balk and Balk owed Epstein.221 Harris traveled from North Carolina to Maryland, where, on behalf of Epstein, a sheriff garnished Harris.222 Harris paid up and went home to North Carolina, where he was promptly sued by Balk, who had never been paid.223 Harris suggested that his payment of the Maryland sheriff constituted payment of Balk, but the North Carolina courts disagreed and passed judgment against Harris who thereby faced having to pay twice.224 Harris appealed to the United States Supreme Court, which ruled that North Carolina was obliged to recognize the Credit Clause of did not have to pay his goes."227 That is situs of Harris his debt, and so Ms having jurisdiction.

In Harris, the a location separa there too is hi impossibility of question of posses taken of a debt might be taken that general int: were followed in quite differently. in attaching Mit of the intangible not in New York.
to recognize the official acts of Maryland under the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the United States Constitution.\textsuperscript{225} Lucky Harris did not have to pay twice.\textsuperscript{226}

In so ruling, the Supreme Court observed, "[t]he obligation of the debtor to pay his debt clings to and accompanies him wherever he goes."\textsuperscript{227} That is to say, the situs of Harris's obligation to pay is the situs of Harris himself.\textsuperscript{228} Since Harris was in Maryland, so was the debt, and so Maryland had jurisdiction of the debt by virtue of having jurisdiction of Harris.\textsuperscript{229} As the \textit{Harris} Court remarked:

If there be a law of the State providing for the attachment of the debt, then if the garnishee [Harris] be found in that State, and process be personally served upon him therein, we think the court thereby acquires jurisdiction over him, and can garnish [on behalf of Epstein] the debt due from [Harris] to the debtor of [Balk] and condemn it, provided the garnishee [Harris] could himself be sued by [Balk's] creditor in that State.\textsuperscript{230}

In \textit{Harris}, the Supreme Court rejected the notion that debts have a location separate from the debtor.\textsuperscript{231} Rather, wherever a debtor is, there too is his debt. This view was driven by the alleged impossibility of "possessing" intangible property: "It is not a question of possession in the foreign State, for possession cannot be taken of a debt or of the obligation to pay it, as tangible property might be taken possession of."\textsuperscript{232} In short, the \textit{Harris} Court denied that general intangibles could ever be "possessed."\textsuperscript{233} If that view were followed in New York, the \textit{Falor} result would have come out quite differently. Serving Mitchell in New York would not succeed in attaching Mitchell's LLC interests. Rather, per \textit{Harris}, the locus of the intangible property is where the garnishee is, which is to say \textit{not} in New York, but rather in Delaware, Georgia, and Florida.\textsuperscript{234}

\textsuperscript{226} \textit{Id.}
\textsuperscript{227} \textit{Id.} at 222.
\textsuperscript{228} \textit{Id.}
\textsuperscript{229} \textit{Id.} at 226 ("[T]he judgment against Harris in Maryland, condemning the $180 which he owed to Balk, was a valid judgment, because the court had jurisdiction over the garnishee by personal service of process within the State of Maryland.").
\textsuperscript{230} \textit{Id.} at 222.
\textsuperscript{231} \textit{Id.} ("The obligation of the debtor to pay his debt clings to and accompanies him wherever he goes.").
\textsuperscript{232} \textit{Id.} at 223.
\textsuperscript{233} \textit{Id.}
Falor, then, contradicts Harris v. Balk. Ordinarily, it is mauvais goût for state courts to snub United States Supreme Court opinions. But was the Harris Court speaking constitutionally when it divorced possession from intangible property? In Harris, Maryland authorized the attachment of a debt by serving the order of attachment on the garnishee. This authorization, and the actual historic garnishment, was held to be within the power of the State of Maryland. For this reason, Maryland's garnishment was entitled to full faith and credit in North Carolina. The Supreme Court's comments on possession can, however, be understood as an interpretation of Maryland law. On this interpretation, Maryland itself defines "possession" in such a way that it cannot apply to intangible property. Given that definition, it was possible for Maryland to conflate the debt with the personhood of the garnishee, so that the sheriff's levy of the garnishee constituted control of the defendant's property. On this reading, Maryland was not constitutionally required to adopt such a rule of location. New York could—and did, prior to Falor—follow a different rule. New York could constitutionally deem the situs of the debt as the garnishee's domicile, not where the garnishee physically happened to be.

To the extent that Mitchell was not a garnishee in Falor but rather a defendant in possession of his own intangible property, the

---

235 Harris, 198 U.S. at 226.
236 Id.
237 Id. at 221.
238 Nat'l Broadway Bank v. Sampson, 179 N.Y. 213, 223, 71 N.E. 766, 769 (1904), abrogated by Falor, 14 N.Y.3d 303, 926 N.E.2d 1202, 900 N.Y.S.2d 698 ("The general rule is well settled that the situs of debts and obligations is at the domicile of the creditor.").
239 Kennedy, supra note 69, at 702.
"The situs of intangibles is in truth a legal fiction, but there are times when justice or convenience requires that a legal situs be ascribed to them. The locality selected is for some purposes, the domicile of the creditor; for others, the domicile or place of business of the debtor, the place, that is to say, where the obligation was created or was meant to be discharged; for others, any place where the debtor can be found. At the root of the selection is generally a common sense appraisal of the requirements of justice and convenience in particular conditions.

Id. (citations omitted).
Falor court disagreed with Maryland's definition of "possession" (as the Harris Court interpreted it).\(^ {241}\) In New York, one can possess intangible property, even though the garnishee is not present in New York.\(^ {242}\) And this rule of location can be constitutionally legislated in New York, because Harris v. Balk did not constitutionalize the definition of "possession."\(^ {243}\) If the Falor definition of "possession" had been operative in Maryland in 1896 (the year of the fateful Harris garnishment), there never would have been a garnishment, because Maryland (and New York as of 1905) would have located the garnishee's obligation in North Carolina.

Ironically, the Falor court did not see itself as departing from Harris v. Balk.\(^ {244}\) It thought it was actually following the case.\(^ {245}\) But in its reliance on Harris, the Falor court turned Harris on its head, much as Marx did to Hegel.\(^ {246}\) Harris stands for the proposition that where the garnishee is, that's where his obligation is.\(^ {247}\) But, insofar as Mitchell (as private defendant) was served with the order of attachment, Mitchell was no garnishee. Rather, Mitchell was a creditor (after a fashion) of the garnishee.\(^ {248}\) In effect, the Falor court applied the Harris v. Balk holding about garnishees to a defendant directly.\(^ {249}\) In so doing, the Falor court was guilty of a serious category mistake. True, we may say that a defendant "possesses" his intangible property, and where Mitchell is, there is his property. This contradicts Harris v. Balk, to the extent the Harris Court held that possession of intangible property was an impossibility.\(^ {250}\) In fact, Harris v. Balk stands against the Falor court, though the Falor court would have done well to ignore \(^ {241}\) Compare Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 311, 926 N.E.2d at 1207, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 703 (finding that intangible property located in the state may be attached despite the possessor not being present in the state), with Harris, 198 U.S. at 222 (finding that intangible property may only be attached when the debtor is present in the state).

\(^ {242}\) Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 311, 926 N.E.2d at 1207, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 703.

\(^ {243}\) See generally Harris, 198 U.S. at 221-23 (failing to provide a definition of "possession").

\(^ {244}\) Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 315, 926 N.E.2d at 1210, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 706 ("[D]efendant Mitchell's status supports application of Harris to the case at bar.").

\(^ {245}\) Id.

\(^ {246}\) KARL MARX, CAPITAL: A CRITIQUE OF POLITICAL ECONOMY 20 (Frederick Engels ed., Samuel Moore & Edward Aveling trans., International Publishers 1967) (1867) ("With [Hegel] it is standing on its head. It must be turned right side up again, if you would discover the rational kernel within the mystical shell.").

\(^ {247}\) Harris, 198 U.S. at 222.

\(^ {248}\) Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 307, 926 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700. Actually, this would be literally true only if the garnishers elected to vote their interest holders a dividend.

\(^ {249}\) See id. at 311, 926 N.E.2d at 1207, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 703 (holding that attachment of intangible property within a state may be used to obtain jurisdiction over a defendant).

\(^ {250}\) See Harris, 198 U.S. at 223.
Harris as a pre-Erie guess about Maryland law which has no relevance to a case governed by New York law.

The Falor court actually contradicts Harris v. Balk. Oddly, the Falor court used Harris to justify overruling its own precedent in National Broadway Bank v. Sampson.251 In National Broadway Bank, the defendant was a Massachusetts corporation.252 The garnishee was a Massachusetts partnership.253 Charles Sampson, a Massachusetts resident, was a partner in the garnishee and therefore was himself a garnishee, as partners are liable for all partnership debts.254 Sampson was in New York casually when he was served with an order of attachment on behalf of the plaintiff.255 The court quashed the attachment because the situs of Sampson's obligation to the defendant was in Massachusetts, where Sampson lived.256 “If his debt had an actual situs,” the National Broadway Bank court said, “it certainly was not migratory, and, therefore, as to him, it might not be attached in any state or jurisdiction where he might sojourn temporarily or in which one of his partners might reside.”257

In effect, the National Broadway Bank court disagreed with Harris v. Balk as to the situs of the payment intangible. Debts may migrate in and out of Maryland, but not in New York. New York is permitted to do this, as the Harris Court was not speaking ex cathedra when it conflated the situs of the garnishee's debt with the garnishee's person. In Harris, the situs was wherever the garnishee was.258 But in National Broadway Bank, the situs was where the garnishee was domiciled, not where the garnishee physically was.259

The National Broadway Bank rule may in fact be a bad rule. In following it, the pre-Falor courts were giving up jurisdiction it could constitutionally assert over casual visitors. Under National 252 Id. at 219–20, 71 N.E. at 767.

253 See id.
254 See id. at 224, 71 N.E. at 769.
255 Id. at 221, 71 N.E. at 768.
256 Id. at 226, 71 N.E. 770.
257 Id. at 225, 71 N.E. at 770. This domicile rule has been traced back to M'Queen v. Middletown Mfg Co. M'Queen v. Middletown Mfg. Co., 16 Johns. 5, 7 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1819); Kennedy, supra note 69, at 700.
259 Nat'l Broadway Bank, 179 N.Y. at 223, 71 N.E. at 767. Eugene H. Sampson was also a partner in the Massachusetts entity and also an account debtor. Id. at 219–20, 71 N.E. at 767. But Eugene was domiciled in New York and therefore the order of attachment as to Eugene was upheld. Id. at 222, 71 N.E. at 768.

260 Id. at 224, 71 N.E.
261 Harris, 198 U.S.
262 See Hotel 71 Me: 900 N.Y.S.2d 698, 706-2008 ('National Broad as evidenced by its hol support an attachment authority for determini N.Y. v. Gunning, 295 N.
263 Gunning, 295 N.
264 See id.
265 Id. at 330, 67 N.E.
266 Id. at 329, 67 N.
267 Harris v. Balk, 11
268 Gunning, 295 N.
269 This language was rew non-resident person or upon whom or which st 329–30, 67 N.E.2d at 5.
Broadway Bank, a garnishee could take in a Broadway show sans peur of garnishment. Under Harris, the garnishee could be garnished. But the Falor court was wrong to think that National Broadway Bank is an unconstitutional rule. To the contrary, the National Broadway Bank rule is every bit as constitutional as the Harris rule. In this respect, the Falor court wrongly constitutionalized the Harris situs rule and used this false principle to overrule National Broadway Bank.

New York may temporarily have conformed to Harris v. Balk years ago—on nonconstitutional grounds. In Morris Plan Industrial Bank of New York v. Gunning, a sheriff levied a garnishee in New York for wages the garnishee owed defendant for work in Pennsylvania. The garnishee was a Pennsylvania domiciliary, having been incorporated there. The Court of Appeals, however, allowed the garnishment, even though the garnishment would have been forbidden under National Broadway Bank. The Gunning court admitted that, prior to 1936, the situs of the wage debt was in Pennsylvania, where the garnishee was domiciled. That is, New York did not conform to Harris v. Balk. But 1936 saw the enactment of the following provision of the attachment statute: “Within the meaning of this section there shall be included any indebtedness due or to become due from a non-resident or foreign corporation, upon whom or which service of process may be made within this state, to any person whether a non-resident or foreign corporation.”

Thus, in 1936 the New York legislature overruled National

---

250 Id. at 224, 71 N.E. at 769.
251 Harris, 198 U.S. at 222.
253 Gunning, 295 N.Y.at 327-28, 67 N.E.2d at 511.
254 See id.
255 Id. at 330, 67 N.E.2d at 512.
256 Id. at 329, 67 N.E.2d at 512.
258 Gunning, 295 N.Y.2d at 329, 67 N.E.2d at 512 (quoting 1936 N.Y. Laws 1718). In 1940, this language was rewritten to state that attachment can reach any debt “to a resident or non-resident person or corporation, from a resident or non-resident person or corporation, upon whom or which service of process may be had within the county.” Gunning, 296 N.Y. at 329-30, 67 N.E.2d at 512 (quoting 1940 N.Y. Laws 1776) (internal quotation marks omitted).
Broadway and opted for the Harris v. Balk rule.269

The Falor court cites Gunning270 and immediately thereafter remarks, "[i]n any event, National Broadway Bank, which was decided over 50 years before the CPLR was enacted, is simply not consonant with CPLR article 62."271 This remark, however, is contradicted by yet another remark: "At the outset, we acknowledge that '[t]he CPLR contains no provision as to the situs of [intangible] property for attachment purposes.'"272

So the court hints at the subconstitutional repeal of National Broadway but never quite articulates it and instead relies on a bad constitutional reading of Harris v. Balk. Why did the Falor court not rely on Gunning's nonconstitutional holding?

Perhaps, the CPLR in fact overrules Gunning. First, CPLR article sixty-two prohibits the prejudgment attachment of wages.273 Second, in the post-judgment context, the CPLR requires that an income execution be served on the sheriff of the county where the judgment debtor resides.274 Or, where the debtor is not a resident of the state, the judgment creditor must deliver the income execution to the sheriff of the county where the debtor is employed.275 Under the modern CPLR, wages earned in Pennsylvania by a Pennsylvania worker could never be garnished in New York.

These points do not exactly go to the legislative intent in 1936 to overrule National Broadway Bank, but we must also observe that the 1936 language longer appears in perhaps the leg. Falor court recog debt.277 Because could not push tr interpretation of

Still, the court in Ror International De called off the sal concept of "red Court of Appeal concept of post-s bidding at exec however, did no judicial sale."284 unless the ba salubrious pre-C

On this basis, a Broadway could

In any case, recommend it.]

It seems rat lodged at the does not leav

---

269 Gunning, 296 N.Y. at 330, 67 N.E.2d at 512.
271 Id.
272 Id. at 314, 926 N.E.2d at 1209, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 705 (alteration in original) (quoting ABKCO Indus., Inc. v. Apple Films, Inc., 39 N.Y.2d 670, 675, 350 N.E.2d 899, 902, 385 N.Y.S.2d 511, 513 (1976)).
274 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5231(b) (McKinney 2013).
275 Id. The effect of CPLR section 5231(b) is to immunize debtors who work outside the state for an employer who is present in New York. See id. In Brown v. Arabian American Oil Co., a judgment debtor worked in Saudi Arabia and AD was properly served by registered mail. Brown v. Arabian Am. Oil Co., 53 Misc. 2d 182, 184, 278 N.Y.S.2d 256, 258-59 (Sup. Ct. Suffolk County 1967). Since the judgment debtor neither lived nor was employed in New York, the creditor could not comply with the above requirements. Id. at 183, 185, 278 N.Y.S.2d at 257, 259. Accordingly, the levy was quashed. Id. at 185, 278 N.Y.S.2d at 258. See also Kaplan v. Supak & Sons Mfg. Co., 46 Misc. 2d 574, 575, 580, 260 N.Y.S.2d 374, 379 (Civ. Ct. N.Y. County 1965) (concluding a Minnesota corporation was not obligated to honor a New York income execution seeking to reach the wages of one of its employees, a resident of Massachusetts, where it was served at its New York office, but had its principal place of business in another state).
276 See Morris Plan 512 (1946).
277 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d 278 Rondack Constr N.E.2d 561, 896 N.Y.S.279 Id. at 583, 923 N 280 Id.
281 Id. at 584, 6 reasoning used by a sh 282 Rondack Constr. (citing Guardian Loan 56, 59, 60 (1979)).
283 Guardian, 47 N.
284 Rondack Constr. 279-80.
the 1936 language cited in Gunning as overruling Harris v. Balk no longer appears in article sixty-two. This absence suggests that perhaps the legislature had reversed itself on this question. As the Falor court recognized, the CPLR has no rule on the situs of the debt. Because of these difficulties, the Falor court evidently felt it could not push too hard on legislative intent. Better to rely on a bad interpretation of constitutional law!

Still, the court might have borrowed a page from its recent opinion in Rondack Construction Services, Inc. v. Kaatsbaan International Dance Center, Inc. In that case, a judgment debtor tendered a cashier’s check to a sheriff preparing to sell the debtor’s real estate pursuant to an execution sale. The sheriff refused to call off the sale, reasoning that the CPLR had repealed the concept of “redemption” with regard to execution sales. “The enactment of CPLR 5236, however, did not alter a debtor’s right to recover property before a judicial sale.” The case arguably stands for the proposition that, unless the badly drafted CPLR expressly states otherwise, salubrious pre-CPLR practices continue to be the law in New York. On this basis, a nonconstitutional pre-CPLR overruling of National Broadway could have been upheld.

In any case, the Broadway National Bank rule has little to recommend it. According to Professor Kennedy:

It seems rather fantastic to hold to a fiction that a debt is lodged at the domicile of the debtor, when the fact is that he does not leave his obligations behind him.

---

277 Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 314, 926 N.E.2d at 1209, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 705.
279 Id. at 583, 923 N.E.2d at 562, 896 N.Y.S.2d at 279.
280 Id.
281 See id. at 584, 923 N.E.2d at 562, 896 N.Y.S.2d at 279 (relying potentially on similar reasoning used by a sheriff in the case of Tiffany v. St. John, 65 N.Y. 314 (1875)).
283 Guardian, 47 N.Y.2d at 520, 392 N.E.2d at 1243, 419 N.Y.S.2d at 60.
It is submitted that New York should remove this remaining "bit of archaic form" which links and restricts the garnishment of intangible debts to the domicile of creditor or debtor. This fiction is not demanded by the constitutional provisions of due process, nor is it imposed upon the courts by legislative mandate. Tested in the scales of justice—which is the sole warrant for the continuance of its fictitious existence—it is arbitrary and unfair to plaintiffs, generally New York citizens or domestic corporations, and unduly mindful of the interests of non-resident defendants and garnishees. Tested in terms of the emergencies and tendencies of the time, this static idea of domicile as a sort of safe-deposit vault for intangible debts is a curious relic in the midst of the fluidity of modern business . . . .

Repeal by the Falor court of the domicile rule may be a good thing. The domicile rule was judicially created, so it presumably could be judicially destroyed as well. But repeal cannot be justified on the grounds of constitutional compulsion.

None of this yet suggests that the Falor court acted unconstitutionally when it subjected Mitchell's interests in the LLCs to the order of attachment. New York could constitutionally declare that a defendant's intangible property is located where a defendant is. Still there is the further question of whether New York's holding is worthy of full faith and credit in other states. Suppose, prior to entry of a final judgment in New York, an agent of plaintiff were to travel to Florida to compel a garnishee domiciled there to honor the New York attachment lien. Must Florida give 285 Kennedy, supra note 69, at 696, 703-04; see also id. at 699 ("[I]nsistent adherence to domicile as a jurisdictional test of garnishment is purely judicial in origin. . . . [I]t is hardly conceivable . . . that the legal fiction that a debt is only attachable or garnishable at the domicile of the debtor-garnishee can permanently endure.").

286 See id. at 696, 697.

287 In Falor, the trial court had appointed a receiver to take charge of the property encumbered by the attachment lien. Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor, 14 N.Y.3d 303, 307, 926 N.E.2d 1202, 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d 698, 700 (2010), rev'd 88 A.D.3d 270, 869 N.Y.S.2d 61 (App. Div. 1st Dep't 2010). This too is a rather surprising development. Article 62 (which governs orders of attachment) nowhere mentions receivers. CPLR section 5228 permits the appointment of a receiver when a judgment creditor moves. N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5228(a) (McKinney 2013). But, prior to the entry of a money judgment, there is no "judgment creditor." The CPLR defines a judgment creditor as "a person in whose favor a money judgment is entered or a person who becomes entitled to enforce it." N.Y. C.P.L.R. 105(1) (McKinney 2013). Article 62 gives rights to plaintiffs, not to judgment creditors. Significantly, the supreme court order appointing the receiver was "conditioned upon the entry of judgment." Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 309, 926 N.E.2d at 1206; 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702 (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor, 58 A.D.3d 270, 275, 869 N.Y.S.2d 61, 63 (App. Div. 1st Dep't 2008), rev'd, 14 N.Y.3d 303, 926 N.E.2d
1 remove this 1 restricts the
of creditor or constitutional
on the courts
of justice—
if its fictitious iffs, generally
and unduly fendants and
us relic in the may be a good
so it presumably or court acted interests in the located where a of whether New York, an agent of nishee domiciled
v. the matter might be different if the property were tangible.
Suppose Mitchell's equity interests were represented by certificated securities, and these certificates were located in Florida. A Florida sheriff pursuant to a Florida execution against Mitchell might levy those shares in total disregard of the New York attachment lien.
This is the implication of another ancient Supreme Court case, Fall
v. Eastin, decided only four years after Harris v. Balk. In Fall, a Washington divorce court ordered a husband to convey Nebraska land to his wife. When he refused, the Washington court issued a decree declaring the wife to be the owner of the Nebraska land.
Subsequently, the husband conveyed the Nebraska land to X. In Nebraska, the wife tried to quiet title against X, but the Nebraska court snubbed the Washington decree and held for X. On appeal, the United States Supreme Court upheld and thereby compounded the insult.

1202, 900 N.Y.S.2d 698). Presumably, this meant that the receiver had no power to do anything until the judgment was actually entered. See Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702.

See Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 312, 926 N.E.2d at 1208, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 704.

In re Marshall, 600 F.3d 1037, 1064-65 (9th Cir.), cert. granted in part, 131 S. Ct. 63 (holding federal district court in California owed full faith and credit to a Texas probate court because the probate court ruled first).

Fall v. Eastin, 215 U.S. 1 (1909); see also David P. Currie, The Constitution in the Supreme Court: Full Faith and the Bill of Rights, 1889-1910, 52 U. CHI. L. REV. 867, 889
n.134 (1985) ("In an obscure and turgid ... opinion, the Court over ... unexplained dissents
... held that Nebraska need not respect a deed to Nebraska land executed by an officer of the state of Washington pursuant to a Washington decree respecting the division of the property of Washington spouses incident to a divorce."). Brainerd Currie writes the classic deconstruction. See Brainerd Currie, Full Faith and Credit to Foreign Land Decrees, 21 U.
CHI. L. REV. 620, 621 (1954) [hereinafter Currie, Full Faith and Credit to Foreign Land Decrees].

Fall, 215 U.S. at 14.

Id.

Id.

Id. at 4, 5, 14.

Id. at 14. The matter would have been different if the wife had sought confirmation from a Nebraska court. In such a case, the Nebraska court would have been obliged to Fall, by its terms, applies equally well to judicial liens on tangible personal property, though some seek to cabin it to real property only. Accordingly, if Mitchell's certificated shares were located in Florida, the Florida sheriff could levy the shares in question pursuant to a Florida judgment (where a creditor had a judgment against Mitchell). In short, Fall suggests a disjunction between liens on intangible property and liens on tangible property not located in New York.

VI. AN LLC IS WHERE ITS PRESIDENT IS

The past few pages have emphasized that, in Falor, the sheriff validly levied against Mitchell as defendant, but only after the court displaced Harris v. Balk, while contradictorily relying on Harris v. Balk to negate an arguably governing New York precedent. But Mitchell was also the agent of twenty-three garnishees.

Enough has been said to establish that, for the order of attachment in Falor to be successful, the plaintiff must establish in personam jurisdiction over the twenty-three garnishees. Any implication that the New York courts had recognize the judgment of the Washington court. Id. at 12. Any subsequent conveyance by the husband to X would have been void. But where X was already the owner by the time the wife sought enforcement, the Nebraska court was apparently within its rights to deny recognition of the wife's title. See id. at 14.

Id. at 12 ("[Full faith and credit] does not extend the jurisdiction of the courts of one State to property situated in another, but only makes the judgment rendered conclusive on the merits of the claim or subject-matter of the suit. . . . Plaintiff seems to contend for a greater efficacy for a decree in equity affecting real property than is given to a judgment at law for the recovery of money simply.").

See Currie, Full Faith and Credit to Foreign Land Degrees, supra note 291, at 639, 640, 648.

Fall, 215 U.S. at 9-10, 11-12.

Id. at 310, 926 N.E.2d at 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702.

See supra text accompanying note 14 (stating that three U.S. Supreme Court cases held that a visit by an officer of a corporation not otherwise doing business in that state is insufficient for the state to exercise jurisdiction over that corporation). These cases held that an officer's casual presence in the state did not suffice to confer personal jurisdiction over the corporation. Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 518 (1923); Bank of Am. v. Whitney Cent. Nat'l Bank, 261 U.S. 171, 171, 173 (1923); Phila. & Reading Ry. Co. v. McKibbin, 243 U.S. 264, 266, 268--69 (1917).
jurisdiction over the garnishees solely by the garnishment of Mitchell must be viewed as unconstitutional and barred by International Shoe principles.\textsuperscript{303}

It is familiar law that, where no minimum contacts exist over a defendant, the defendant may nevertheless waive jurisdiction by making a personal appearance. According to CPLR section 320(b): “Subject to the provisions of subdivision (c), an appearance of the defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons upon him, unless an objection to jurisdiction under paragraph eight of subdivision (a) of rule 3211 is asserted by motion or in the answer as provided in rule 3211.”\textsuperscript{304} CPLR section 3211(a)(8) governs motions to dismiss, \textit{inter alia}, on the ground that “the court has not [sic] jurisdiction of the person of the defendant.”\textsuperscript{305} This provision, however, has no relevance. The garnishees in \textit{Falor} were not defendants. So they did not have to make what New York law used to call a “general” or even a “special appearance.”\textsuperscript{306}

Did the garnishees do anything else that constituted consent to jurisdiction in New York? They certainly were not parties to the guaranty contract, in which the defendants consented to jurisdiction.\textsuperscript{307} They did, however, comply with CPLR section 6219,\textsuperscript{308} as garnishees are supposed to do. According to section 6219:

Within ten days after service upon a garnishee of an order of attachment, \ldots{} the garnishee shall serve upon the sheriff a statement specifying all debts of the garnishee to the defendant, when the debts are due, all property in the possession or custody of the garnishee in which the defendant has an interest, and the amounts and value of the debts and property specified.\textsuperscript{309}

The question arises whether submission of section 6219 amounts to consent by the twenty-three garnishees to the jurisdiction of the New York court.

\textsuperscript{303} Int’l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 317 (1945) (stating that the presence of an agent in a state, or even the performance of an isolated activity on the behalf of the corporation, is insufficient to exercise personal jurisdiction over the corporation).
\textsuperscript{304} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 320(b) (McKinney 2013) (emphasis added).
\textsuperscript{305} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 3211(a)(8) (McKinney 2013).
\textsuperscript{308} Id. at 308–09, 926 N.E.2d at 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
\textsuperscript{309} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6219 (McKinney 2013).
There is some statutory evidence that submission of a 6219 statement by a garnishee does not constitute consent to in personam jurisdiction over the garnishee. CPLR section 6211(b) governs the hearing to confirm an order of attachment that has been issued ex parte.\textsuperscript{310} The first sentence of section 6211(b) does not expressly apply when the grounds of attachment is that the defendant is a nondomiciliary.\textsuperscript{311} According to the second sentence of this provision:

Where an order of attachment without notice is granted on the ground specified in subdivision one of section 6201, the court shall direct that the statement required by section 6219 be served within five days, that a copy thereof be served upon the plaintiff, and the plaintiff shall move within ten days after levy for an order confirming the order of attachment.\textsuperscript{312}

Confusingly, this provision assumes that the confirmation hearing will be held after the garnishee submits its section 6219 statement. In Falor, the section 6219 statements were submitted long after the hearing had concluded.\textsuperscript{313} This, however, does not appear to be a problem insofar as the defendants are concerned. In fact, the Supreme Court, New York County had ordered that the levy should not occur until after the confirmation hearing.\textsuperscript{314} The garnishees, however, have every right to complain about the section 6211 hearing.\textsuperscript{315} The plaintiff must move to confirm.\textsuperscript{316} Motions require service of the motion.\textsuperscript{317} This means service on the garnishee.\textsuperscript{318} Service on the defendants after the hearing is over is not service on the garnishee.\textsuperscript{319}

Be that as it may, Mitchell (as defendant) appeared personally and through attorneys (for the defendants) at the CPLR section 6211(b) hearing to oppose confirmation of the order of attachment.\textsuperscript{320} But suppose we say that he was also there as an agent of the garnishee. The 6219 statement confirmation, if had could have moved attachment (where we shall not of itself we have some ev) which the CPI constitute conse moving to vacat of the order of a

Still, if Mitch against the garnishee special appears, jurisdiction is on the erroneout officer casually jurisdiction.\textsuperscript{325} the order of at than as a defen and the garnis the garnishees. It is most unl the rights of t the more plausible attorneys appe: We learn from t

\textsuperscript{310} N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6211(b) (McKinney 2013).
\textsuperscript{311} Id.; N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6201(1) (McKinney 2013).
\textsuperscript{312} C.P.L.R. 6211(b).
\textsuperscript{313} Falor, at 308–09, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701 (stating that it was not until the supreme court had sealed off the record following oral arguments on October 23, 2007 that Mitchell provided CPLR section 6219 statements to the plaintiff).
\textsuperscript{314} See id. at 308, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701.
\textsuperscript{315} See C.P.L.R. 6211(b).
\textsuperscript{316} Id.
\textsuperscript{317} See id.
\textsuperscript{318} See id.
\textsuperscript{319} See id.
\textsuperscript{320} Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor, 14 N.Y.3d 303, 308–09, 926 N.E.2d 1202, 1205, 900 agent of the garnishees (who had already submitted CPLR section 6219 statements). As an alternative to simply opposing confirmation, fiduciary Mitchell, pursuant to CPLR section 6223(a), could have moved on behalf of the garnishees to vacate the order of attachment (which was outstanding even if not yet confirmed).\footnote{Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 309, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701–02.} According to the last sentence of section 6223(a), "[s]uch a motion shall not of itself constitute an appearance in the action."\footnote{See Vander v. Casperson, 12 N.Y.2d 56, 58–59, 61, 187 N.E.2d 109, 110–10, 111, 236 N.Y.S.2d 33, 34, 36 (1962) (holding when New York defendants made a special appearance in a Florida court to challenge jurisdiction, the defendants are bound by the Florida court's jurisdictional determination).} Here we have some evidence that the CPLR section 6219 statement, upon which the CPLR section 6211(b) hearing is predicated, cannot constitute consent of the garnishees to New York jurisdiction. If moving to vacate is not an appearance, then opposing confirmation of the order of attachment is not an appearance either.

Still, if Mitchell appeared for the garnishees, the court determined against the garnishees in the end.\footnote{See discussion supra Part II (arguing that the Falor court was in error when it held that jurisdiction over the corporate fiduciary extends to jurisdiction over the corporation when the fiduciary’s presence in the state is unrelated to its’ corporate duties).} As is well understood, a special appearance to contest jurisdiction that results in a finding of jurisdiction is entitled to full faith and credit,\footnote{See generally Vander, 12 N.Y.2d at 59, 187 N.E.2d at 110, 236 N.Y.S.2d at 35 (“[A] judgment rendered in another State is not conclusive where the person against whom judgment entered was not served . . ..”).} even if it is based on the erroneous proposition that service of process on a corporate officer casually in New York is enough, without more, to justify jurisdiction.\footnote{See discussion supra Part I (relating to Mitchell’s dual role of a private citizen defendant and corporate fiduciary defendant).} But this would turn on Mitchell’s intent to protest the order of attachment as a fiduciary for the garnishees, rather than as a defendant.\footnote{Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 309, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701–02.} If Mitchell was there only as a defendant and the garnishees made no special appearance, any ruling against the garnishees is not entitled to full faith and credit.

It is most unlikely that fiduciary Mitchell intended to compromise the rights of the garnishees by appearing for them. Rather, it is more plausible that Mitchell appeared for himself, or that his attorneys appeared for the defendants, but not for the garnishees. We learn from the Falor court that:

[D]efendant Mitchell, pursuant to CPLR 6219, provided

\footnote{Falor, 14 N.Y.3d at 308, 309, 926 N.E.2d at 1205, 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 701–02.}
\footnote{See Vander v. Casperson, 12 N.Y.2d 56, 58–59, 61, 187 N.E.2d 109, 110–10, 111, 236 N.Y.S.2d 33, 34, 36 (1962) (holding when New York defendants made a special appearance in a Florida court to challenge jurisdiction, the defendants are bound by the Florida court’s jurisdictional determination).}

It is most unlikely that fiduciary Mitchell intended to compromise the rights of the garnishees by appearing for them. Rather, it is more plausible that Mitchell appeared for himself, or that his attorneys appeared for the defendants, but not for the garnishees. We learn from the Falor court that:

[D]efendant Mitchell, pursuant to CPLR 6219, provided
plaintiff with garnishee statements for the 23 entities. Defendant Mitchell does not dispute that he is the “proper garnishee” (within CPLR 5201 [c] [1]) for defendants’ ownership/membership interests. Nor does defendant Mitchell argue that he was improperly served. Defendant Mitchell, through counsel, stated in a letter to Supreme Court dated January 28, 2008, “[w]e are prepared to waive any argument that the proper garnishee was not served with the order of attachment or the related levies in this case.”

But Mitchell also proceeded (as a defendant) to state that the order of attachment was improper because the situs of the defendants’ property was in Delaware, Georgia, and Florida, not New York. This seems to have been an inarticulate way of protesting that the New York courts had no jurisdiction over the persons of the garnishees. Thus, the appellate division, which had ruled against the order of attachment, remarked:

The mere fact that the order of attachment in this case was served upon defendant Mitchell, a resident and domiciliary of Florida, who was in New York temporarily solely to attend his deposition and does not dispute that he is the proper garnishee within the meaning of CPLR 5201 (c) (1), does not establish the situs of the res, i.e., the defendants’ ownership and/or management interests, if any, in 23 entities . . . in New York.

We read the appellate division as responding to Mitchell’s protest as a defendant to jurisdiction over the garnishees. We do not read this as meaning that the attorneys for Mitchell meant to act as the attorneys for the garnishees. If this is the case, the order of attachment, to this day, has not yet been established as valid against the garnishees. All we know is that, insofar as the private defendants are concerned, the order of attachment was properly issued.

Further puzzles arise. For the purpose of this discussion, we ignore the fact that, between confirmation of the order of attachment and the resolution of the appeal, the supreme court issued judgments against the defendants. Recall that a levy pursuant to an order of attachment would lapse. In re garnishees to a personam jurisdiction in any New York other states. Alternatively nunc pro tunc commencing a special proceeding compel the . . . governed by Article 2 of the Uniform Commercial Code, under subdivision CPLR section 6214(d).

At the expiration of the time within which to file a notice of appeal or to serve the court, the attorneys for the garnishees may file a motion to confirm the order of attachment. See N.Y. C.P.L.R. § 5224 (a). See Underwriting Ass’n, 455 U.S. 691, 697-98 (1982).

See Underwriting Ass’n, 455 U.S. 691, 697-98 (1982).
pursuant to an order of attachment lasts ninety days, after which they lapse. If the order of attachment in Falor were to lapse, the plaintiffs would be required to revive it with a motion nunc pro tunc. In response to this motion, it should be open for the garnishees to make a "special appearance" to protest a lack of in personam jurisdiction. Or the garnishees could say nothing, and any New York ruling would be disentitled to full faith and credit in other states.

Alternatively, it is open, prior to the ninety-day lapse or after a nunc pro tunc revival, for the plaintiff to perpetuate the levy by commencing a turnover proceeding pursuant to CPLR section 6214(d). According to CPLR section 6214(e):

At the expiration of ninety days after a levy is made by service of the order of attachment, or of such further time as the court, upon motion of the plaintiff on notice to the parties to the action, has provided, the levy shall be void except as to property or debts which the sheriff has taken into his actual custody, collected or received or as to which a proceeding under subdivision (d) has been commenced.

CPLR section 6214(d) requires the plaintiff to "commence a special proceeding against the garnishee served with the order to compel the . . . transfer to the sheriff." A "special proceeding" is governed by Article 4 of the CPLR. There we learn that "a notice of petition shall be served in the same manner as a summons in an action." Service of the order of attachment on Mitchell was certainly not the commencement of a special proceeding against the garnishees. Service would have to be accomplished anew.

confirm the order of attachment was granted on February 8, 2009 and judgment was entered against six defendants on April 21, 2008. Id. at 310, 926 N.E.2d at 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702.

333 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214(e) (McKinney 2013).

336 C.P.L.R. 6214(d).

337 C.P.L.R. 6214(e) (emphasis added).

338 C.P.L.R. 6214(d) (emphasis added).

340 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 403(e) (McKinney 2013).

341 See C.P.L.R. 403(a). "A notice of petition shall specify the time and place of the hearing on the petition . . . ." Id. The order of attachment would not have met these criteria and therefore would not be considered to have instituted a special proceeding. See Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor, 14 N.Y.3d 303, 308, 926 N.E.2d 1202, 1205, 900 N.Y.S.2d 698, 701 (2010), revo'g 58 A.D.3d 270, 869 N.Y.S.2d 61 (App. Div. 1st Dep't 2008).
Since we are dealing largely with LLCs, CPLR section 311-a(a) applies:

Service of process on any domestic or foreign [LLC] shall be made by delivering a copy personally to (i) any member of the limited liability company in this state, if the management of the [LLC] is vested in its members, (ii) any manager of the [LLC] in this state, if the management of the [LLC] is vested in one or more managers, (iii) to any other agent authorized by appointment to receive process, or (iv) to any other person designated by the [LLC] to receive process . . . . \(^{343}\)

The words "in this state" in CPLR section 311-a(a) should be read to mean that the LLC (and not merely is member or manager) must be "in this state" for jurisdictional purposes, not that the agent is in the state.\(^{344}\) Otherwise, the casual visit of an LLC agent would subject the LLC (not otherwise present) to New York jurisdiction. Such interpretation, we argue, would render section 311-l(a) unconstitutional. Such interpretation should be avoided if possible.\(^{345}\)

Suppose the members of the LLCs in question never again come to New York, even on casual visits. In that case, the plaintiff would have to proceed under section 311-a(b) where it states “[i]f service is impracticable under subdivision (a) of this section, it may be made in such manner as the court, upon motion without notice, directs.”\(^{346}\)

Assuming service is accomplished under CPLR section 311-a(b), in the special proceeding that results, the garnishees would again have the opportunity to protest lack of in personam jurisdiction.\(^{347}\)

Or they could simply default, confident that any ruling against them would be entitled to no full faith and credit.\(^{348}\)

Judgments, however, were issued in the meantime, so that, by the time the Court of Appeals reversed and upheld the order of attachment, the This circumstances: CPLR section 6 entered against custody and dis an order of at pursuant to the

Were the plain plaintiff would

The nunc pro tunc garnishees,\(^{352}\) issues could be appear in the attachment.\(^{353}\)

To summarize little. Even if proper levy, the case, fiduciary York jurisdiction in a special proceed happened in th estops the ge jurisdiction.\(^{355}\)

In Hotel 71 jurisdiction over debtors—by gr though the pre

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the

attachment, the
attachment, the parties in Falor were in a post-judgment mode. This circumstance in no way changes the analysis. According to CPLR section 6226: “Where an execution is issued upon a judgment entered against the defendant, the sheriff’s duty with respect to custody and disposition of property or debt levied upon pursuant to an order of attachment is the same as if he had levied upon it pursuant to the execution.”

Were the plaintiff in Falor to issue an execution to the sheriff, the plaintiff would find that the levy under CPLR section 6214(b) had lapsed. The plaintiff would still be required to revive the levy nunc pro tunc and commence a special proceeding against the garnishees. In the post-judgment context, all of the jurisdictional issues could be raised by the garnishees, if the garnishees did not appear in the original section 6211(b) hearing on the order of attachment.

To summarize, the Falor court’s opinion actually decided very little. Even if service on Mitchell of the order of attachment was a proper levy, the levy must still be enforced. If, as is apparently the case, fiduciary Mitchell never intended to subject the LLCs to New York jurisdiction, it is still open for the garnishees to challenge jurisdiction in a motion to revive the lapsed levy or in the required special proceeding to make the levy perpetual. Nothing that happened in the section 6211(b) hearing or the subsequent appeals estops the garnishees from protesting the lack of personal jurisdiction.

VII. CONCLUSION

In Hotel 71 Mezz Lender LLC v. Falor, a plaintiff obtained jurisdiction over corporate account debtors—the debtors of various debtors—by grabbing the person of the corporations’ president, even though the president was “casually” in New York—that is, present for reasons unconnected with the corporations of which the

---

351 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6214(e) (McKinney 2013) (“[E]xpiration of ninety days after a levy is made by service of the order of attachment ....”).
352 N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6225(b) (McKinney 2013); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 5227 (McKinney 2013).
353 See N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6211(b) (McKinney 2013); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6223(a) (McKinney 2013).
354 C.P.L.R. 6223(a); N.Y. C.P.L.R. 6221 (McKinney 2013).
355 C.P.L.R. 6223(a); C.P.L.R. 6211(b).
garnishee was president.\textsuperscript{355} Such jurisdiction directly contradicts the holdings of multiple Supreme Court cases,\textsuperscript{357} not to mention a dictum in the famous case of International Shoe v. Washington.\textsuperscript{358} In the course of so doing, the \textit{Falor} court turned \textit{Harris v. Balk} on its head. \textit{Harris} involved the location of intangible property.\textsuperscript{359} It stands for the sub-constitutional proposition that, at least in Maryland, a debt is located where the account debtor is, and jurisdiction over the account debtor establishes \emph{quasi in rem} jurisdiction over the debt.\textsuperscript{360} Although \textit{Harris} is about account debtors, the \textit{Falor} court applied its learning to creditors of the account debtor—that is, to defendants.\textsuperscript{361} According to the \textit{Falor} court, where defendants are, that is where their intangible property is.\textsuperscript{362} This is the dead opposite of what \textit{Harris} stands for. \textit{Harris} locates the debt were the garnishee is.\textsuperscript{363}

Meanwhile, the \textit{Falor} court used the sub-constitutional proposition of \textit{Harris} to overrule a governing New York precedent—on constitutional grounds!\textsuperscript{364} Granted, the old rule from \textit{National Broadway Bank v. Sampson}—a debt is located where the account debtor is \textit{domiciled}—limits the constitutional reach of New York courts.\textsuperscript{365} It is probably not a very good rule. But there is no \textit{constitutional} reason why New York courts should maximize their reach. The overruling of \textit{National Broadway Bank} therefore must be understood as judicial legislation—permissible but not constitutionally required.

So the \textit{Falor} opinion violates the Constitution and, in addition, changes New York law on \textit{faux} constitutional grounds. It is doubtful that any of this was intended. Rather, the facts in \textit{Falor} were so confusing that the matters simply got mixed up. Nevertheless, once the facts get untangled, the unconstitutionality of \textit{Falor} becomes apparent. Corporations and LLCs are not located \textsuperscript{358} Int'l Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 317 (1945).

\textsuperscript{359} Harris v. Balk, 198 U.S. 215, 221 (1905).
\textsuperscript{360} \textit{Id.} at 221, 222.
\textsuperscript{361} \textit{Falor}, 14 N.Y.3d at 307, 926 N.E.2d at 1204, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 700.
\textsuperscript{362} \textit{Id.} at 310, 926 N.E.2d at 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702.
\textsuperscript{363} \textit{Harris}, 198 U.S. at 221, 222--23.
\textsuperscript{364} \textit{Falor}, 14 N.Y.3d at 310, 926 N.E.2d at 1206, 900 N.Y.S.2d at 702.
The facts in Falor got mixed up. It is constitutional, therefore must maximize their potential but not.

A corporation is not in New York just because an agent flies to New York to take in a Broadway show. Any attempt by the New York Court of Appeals to claim otherwise transcends the bounds of the United States Constitution.

---

I.E. 766, 769 (1904), 2010).